ALL CALORIES ARE NOT CREATED EQUAL

Most of us think of calories as being all bad. They're not. You need the energy they provide.

However, some foods provide more nutrients with their calories than others and work harder for you nutritionally.

In other words, some foods have more nutrients per calorie than others.

And soup is one of those foods.

SOUPED-UP CALORIES

Most Campbell's Soups are dense in nutrients, so you get a higher level of nutrition with fewer calories than you get from many other foods.

MORE NUTRIENTS IN SOUP CALORIES

Because of their nutritionally hard-working calories, many Campbell's Soups are more nutritious than other good foods. Calorie for calorie, Campbell's Tomato Soup has more Vitamin C than carrots or apricots.

Campbell's Vegetable Soups are excellent sources of Vitamin A.

Campbell's Minestrone, for instance, has more Vitamin A per calorie than eggs.

And some Campbell's Soups supply other recognized, but less well-known nutrients called "trace elements" which the body needs in small but essential amounts to function properly.

So get the benefit of the hard-working calories in Campbell's Soups, with an added dividend. The calories in Campbell's Soups taste great!

SOUP IS GOOD FOOD

*The only full line of top quality
Skating Boots ever endorsed by the Professional Skaters Guild of America*

*Endorsed for Beginners -
Top Competitors &
Leading Professionals*

The first endorsement ever made by the Professional Skaters Guild of America was on the Riedell Models 220-101 four years ago. It was agreed upon by the members of the P.S.G.A. that these models were the finest skating shoes made for beginning skaters in that they offered great support, great fit, and excellent styling.

Now, after four years of additional research and development along with continued improvement on all intermediate and top competitive skating boot models, the P.S.G.A. and Riedell Shoes have extended this endorsement to cover the following styles:

101-220 Beginners
90-900 Royal

55-355 Silver Star
950 Imperial

75-375 Gold Star
240-340-440 Ice Rentals

The 240-340-440 Ice Rental series have also been included in the new endorsement contract because of their high quality, excellent fit, and great comfort. During the past four years, Riedell Shoes has done extensive research in the rental skate area and has field tested the products in many rinks throughout the U.S.A. to come up with a product worthy of this endorsement.

The front cockpit of the open biplane was occupied by a veteran instructor. I had the back cockpit, also a helmet, goggles, a control-stick in my hot hand, and a severe case of flyer's nerves. Later, the instructor called my flying "wrestling the airplane." Then, he called something else, not fit for a family magazine, and followed it by yelling, "LET GO OF THAT STICK!!" which was easy to do since it was banging back and forth between my knees. "STICK YOUR HANDS UP IN THE AIR!" Up they went. So did his. (We must have looked like two acrobats readying a final stunt.) The plane apparently didn't mind at all. Totally adrift, one of its wings would occasionally dip, then return to normal. The other would follow suit, but mostly the nose would drop a bit, the speed would increase, bringing the nose back to level and upward until the speed slowed, whereupon it would return to level flight again. If the plane's path was more like a tipsy pigeon's, it managed to do a creditable job, apparently satisfying the guy in the front cockpit, for he yelled, "SEE! THIS PLANE CAN FLY BETTER THAN YOU CAN!!"

Ice has been a part of the earth's surface for aeons. The ice skate, on the other hand, is of comparably recent origin. Originally wood and bone, the use of metal made it far more practical. Rockering it made it versatile, and the hollow running length of the blade was the final touch. Brilliantly designed, it performs wonders. The trick is to let it.

An example, I needed an easily-seen circle one day while teaching an adult beginner class. Holding a large marker pen in my hand, I circled, stooped and held the marker tip to the ice. With my arm motionless and not really looking where I was going I easily returned to my starting point. The class members looked at the near-perfect circle and applauded. They didn't know all the credit belonged to the figure skating blades. And the blades always will—take you around circles, that is—if you will let them.

With that marker pen I almost felt like a human scribe. The metal scribe is a super-invention, a lovely instrument (and a far cry from the original two huge spike nails with rope attached accompanied by two human beings for operation). The circles it makes are perfect. I mean, nothing else can make such perfection (for that matter, so could the nails). Perfection in this world is rare. We all strive for it and hope in some way to achieve it. The opportunity arrives in figure skating when the scribed circle and the figure skate path are "compared" during execution. The opportunity is botched when the blade obeys the scribe's path slavishly. Slavery went out with the Civil War. Unfortunately, "scribbery" may have taken its place.

21ST CENTURY DICTIONARY DEFINITION: SCRIBERY: An affliction occurring during the 20th century to participants in the sport of figure skating who were influenced by a circle-forming device into a hypnotic state, causing them to forsake all independent action while trying to form what was then known as figure eights. The affliction in its most serious form resulted in seizures when the victim was confronted with a clean sheet of ice unaccompanied by the metal device. Some of the symptoms were trembling, crying, extreme pallor, faulty vision and total amnesia. Cases were reported of victims found unable to move prior to figure-eight execution. One such can be found enshrined as a statue in the middle of the Humpty-Dumpty ice rink in Spookersville, Iowa, and is known as an excellent representation of the 20th century figure skater.

A few pros were discussing the attitude of a particular skater. When Barry Hagan came up with the most enlightening description of what many skaters do. He said: "Oh, she's just wasting space."

Ice Dancer Barry Hagan, with partner Kim Krohn, have left the amateur ranks this year to compete professionally and teach. It is always fun to be around new teaching pros, as they experience the same basic annoyances and joys related to the profession, but with a naive enlightenment and a sense of personal discovery.

What is wasting space? Of course I am talking about an ice rink under competitive training conditions. The skaters standing in groups talking in the areas where others are attempting to land jumps, are not only taking up valuable space from others, but wasting it by not using it for development purposes of their own.

Running off the ice every few minutes to get a drink of water, go to the bathroom, or make a phone call, is emptying space that should have been utilized with a working body. At the price of ice these days, it might be astounding to add up the money "thrown out" in wasting space.

There are many ways to use space even when you are resting or having a discussion with someone else. Instead of standing in the way of working skaters, it would be well to go to the railing and (while talking or resting) go through a series of limbering and stretching exercises. In this way space is being used that was paid for and you are developing your body to help it perform the maneuvers you want it to do.

In talking about wasting space, the inevitable question arises. Do some skaters skate too much? Each body is different and not every skater can bear up under concentrated stress for indeterminate lengths of time; especially very young skaters. Therefore, time and space are wasted when a skater has too many patches, as there is a point where concentration stops and time begins to be wasted. It is better to have fewer patches in this case and more concentrated effort.

It seems to me that it would be a lot less expensive and more productive to plan with your coach a daily schedule suitable to the age and concentration level of the skater. Comparisons with other skaters should be barred. The extra time gained could be used for Nautilus, weight training, jazz, ballet, or other types of off-ice body development.

There is another aspect to wasting space that is not done deliberately as in the above examples. Skaters should be aware that they are wasting space when they do not perform their body and arm movements to the fullest extension that has been choreographed for them.

If the intention of an arm movement is to move from a point starting from the hip and rising to above eye level, but the skater starts it at the chest and moves it to shoulder level—that skater is wasting the usable space around his or her body.

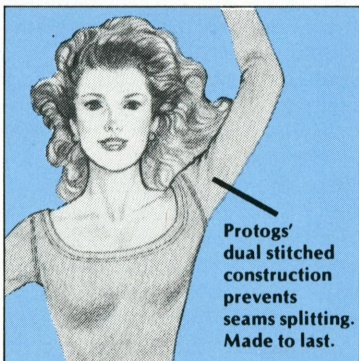

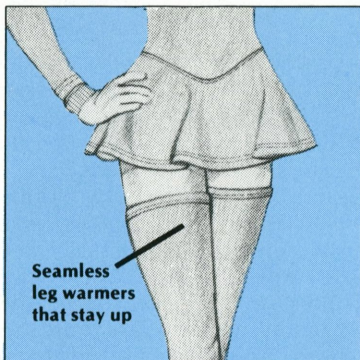

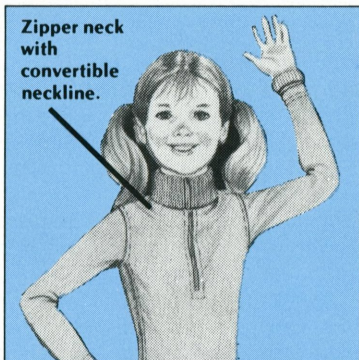

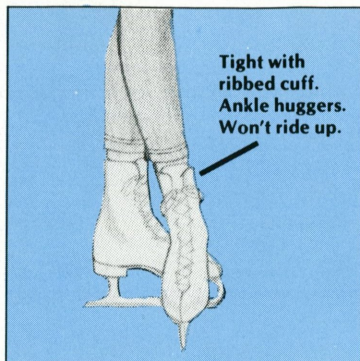

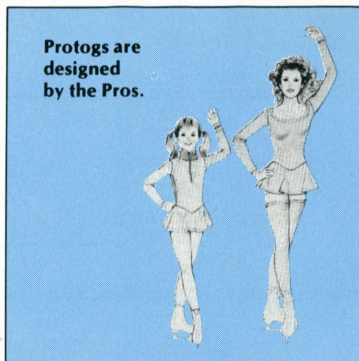

The same theory can be applied to the stretch of the leg and to jumps. When a skater is capable of jumping a foot off the ice, but instead is jumping inches, again that skater is wasting space.

Nutritional Guide for the Skater.

BASIC CONCEPTS IN FOODS AND NUTRITION

by

*A.E. Denton, Ph.D. and C.S. Khoo, Ph.D.
Campbell Soup Company*

Last month we discussed the importance of nutrition to normal growth, health maintenance and disease prevention. More importantly, the critical effect of diet on performance, especially for athletes in competitive sports, was emphasized. In this issue, we will discuss basic food composition with emphasis on the types and combinations of foods most appropriate for athletes.

Basically, there are six classes of nutrients recognized as essential for proper body functions. These are carbohydrates, proteins, fats, vitamins, minerals and water. All these nutrients are obtained from foods or water. Carbohydrates, fats and proteins are the sources of calories from foods. Carbohydrates and proteins provide about 4 calories per gram and fats provide about 9 calories per gram. Alcohol provides about 7 calories per gram.

Carbohydrates are the most efficient source of energy in the body. They are stored in limited amounts as glycogen in the liver and skeletal muscles, and represent the "quick" energy mobilized in time of exercise and work. Fats represent the single largest source of energy in the body, and are mobilized when glycogen storage is reduced. Proteins are sometimes converted to energy; however, this event is usually carefully controlled, and serves as the last resource for the body to generate energy. The body spares protein for use as an energy source in order to protect the important, and often irreplaceable function of this nutrient for growth, tissue repair, etc.

Water constitutes approximately 70% of body weight, and is vital in maintaining electrolyte balance, body temperature, digestion, and removal of body waste. Approximately 9-12 glasses of water have been recommended by the National Academy of Sciences for the average teenager and adult. Water requirement goes up rapidly in hot weather, or during intense exercise and sports. Requirement under these conditions could easily double. Dehydration is one of the most serious problems of athletes, as it may lead to heat stroke.

Vitamins and minerals represent two other classes of essential nutrients required for normal body functions. Vitamins A, D, E, K are called fat-soluble vitamins, while vitamins C and the B series (thiamine, riboflavin, niacin, vitamin B-6, folacin, and vitamin B-12, etc.) are called water-soluble vitamins. There are about 15 minerals known to be essential to man. Most of them function to regulate chemical processes. Minerals such as calcium, phosphorus and fluoride are constituents of bones and teeth.

The key question is: Are there different requirements for athletes? This is a question often asked, and is an area of much debate and active research. Increased requirements of certain energy-dependent nutrients, e.g., thiamine, riboflavin, iron, etc. have been suggested for athletes due to the increased energy expenditure of athletes. Most researchers agree that the basic nutritional needs of most athletes during training do not change appreciably with different sports, nor do they vary from the basic nutrition needs of individuals, except in the quantity of foods consumed. Energy increase could be from 500 to 1,200 extra calories a day depending on the intensity of the activity. Some athletes in very active sports may require up to 5,000 calories a day.

A common myth among many athletes is to try to obtain all these increased nutrients from a single food, rather than from a variety of selected food groups. Megadoses of vitamin and mineral supplementation or fad diets are not required. Such practice may lead to nutrient toxicity and induction of deficiency in other nutrients. For athletes, the effect of any deficiency is more marked, and is quickly reflected in impaired performance. Thus, it is more critical for athletes than for average individuals to adhere to a good basic balanced diet.

The basic diet for athletes must meet the needs to: (1) maintain an efficient body weight, and (2) meet the increased energy requirements of training and competition. Efficient body weight requires that excess calories not be stored as body fat which will hence reduce physical performance.

The recommended basic diet (according to the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Sciences) should contain between 8% to 11% of the calories from proteins, not more than 35% from fat, and at least 55% from carbohydrates, preferably complex carbohydrates such as starches. High protein (160g/day) diets are not beneficial to athletes. They may lead to excessive strain on the liver and kidneys and over consumption of fat and cholesterol, and under consumption of carbohydrate.

For all female and teenage male athletes, the basic diet must contain adequate iron. An iron supplement is usually recommended for these individuals. Large doses of iron are discouraged as they lead to iron toxicity. Extra electrolytes (sodium or potassium) such as salt tablets are not recommended as they may lead to dehydration.

Supplemental intakes of vitamins C, A, D, E, K, and B are not required, if a balanced diet is adhered to. However, for athletes who are vegetarians, increased vitamin B-12 intake is generally recommended, in addition to a careful monitor of the quality of protein eaten. To ensure all essential amino acids are present, vegetable protein should be complemented by dairy or other good quality protein sources.

In summary, the basic dietary requirements of athletes are really not much different from non-athletes; however, the need to have a balanced diet is more critical. The basic diet should be derived from a balanced variety of foods, in serving portions higher than the average person, to meet their increased caloric needs. With this as background, the construction of a basic diet to meet the specific physical needs of any sport can be accomplished by using some simple dietary or eating guidelines which will be discussed in our next article.

"CHARLOTTE"

Charlotte Oelschlagel was born in Berlin, August 14, 1898, but is best known as just "Charlotte." In her early childhood, Charlotte suffered a nervous breakdown and after numerous remedies that were unsuccessful, a physician friend of the family recommended outdoor exercise. As it was winter, her mother took her ice skating. This was the beginning of Charlotte's recovery.

As a child, Charlotte was musically inclined, in fact, in December 1905, at the age of seven, she appeared before the Berlin Philharmonics playing the harp, mandolin and lute. With this musical background, Charlotte found skating to be both graceful and musical. For two months, Charlotte took skating lessons under the instruction of Paul Munder, circus artist and skating teacher for the Crown Prince. He found her to be "quite fussy and knew more than he did."

The Eispalast in Berlin was organizing a small skating carnival and the manager wanted Charlotte to appear. Charlotte's father, Wilhelm Oelschlagel, was quite wealthy and opposed to his daughter appearing as a showgirl; however, with much persuasion and the support of her doctor, Charlotte's career as a professional skater began.

On November 18, 1908, barely ten years old, she made her first appearance. From 1910 to 1914 she played at the Admirals Palast and at the age of fourteen she performed at the Royal Hochburg in Vienna and received a gold medal.

After one of her performances in Berlin, an American agent contacted Charlotte and offered her a $5,000 a week contract if she would go to New York. In 1915, she and twenty skaters from Berlin left for New York under contract to Charles Dillingham. Over two million people saw the show "Hip Hip Hooray," which ran for over eight months and included 425 performances. After the New York run, the cast went on tour to Chicago and other major cities of the United States.

In 1916, Charlotte starred in the first ice skating motion picture, The Frozen Warning, a six-part serial, produced by the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, Chicago, Illinois.

Charlotte returned to Berlin for a year, after World War I. In 1921, she returned to New York to appear in "Get Together." Charlotte met Dr. Anselm Gotzl, composer and conductor in charge of the show and at the conclusion of "Get Together," Charlotte and Dr. Gotzl were married, April 1922. In 1923, Dr. Gotzl died, only eight months after their marriage and two days before the opening of a new show in Barcelona, Spain. Charlotte continued to perform in the show, but collapsed two months later. While she was in Spain, she met Curt Newmann, who became her skating partner. They were married in 1926.

In 1939, Charlotte's mother died and she and her husband returned to Berlin. They were trapped by the start of the

by Barry Lake

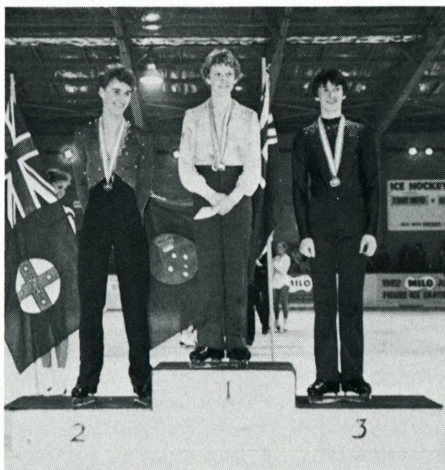

With the departure of Australian Senior Men's Champion Michael Pasfield from the amateur ranks before this year's Australian Figure Skating Championships, the way was paved for dynamic seventeen-year-old Victorian skater Cameron Medhurst to soar to victory and to take his first Gold medal in the senior ranks. Medhurst was Australian Junior Champion in 1979 but, despite continual improvement, had to settle for the Silver medal behind Pasfield in both the 1980 and 1981 Senior Championships.

Medhurst, seventh in the 1981 Junior Worlds, now has his sights set on success in senior international competition. He left for the Coupe des Alpes in France and Germany almost before the Gold medal had cooled in the trophy cabinet and has high hopes of a good placing in the World Championships in March.

Cameron included in his long program triple Lutz, triple loop, triple Salchow, and triple toe loop as well as a triple toe loop in combination. Along with a variety of different and original spins, these gave Medhurst a program which even Michael Pasfield would have had difficulty beating.

Small wonder, then, that Perry Meek (1981 Australian Junior Champion and recent winner of the NSW Senior Championship) had to settle for second place despite a fine performance of his own. Mark Basto, winner of the figures section, also gave a good performance in the free skating, but was squeezed back to third overall by the two already mentioned.

Vicki Holland, nineteen, won the Senior Ladies Championship for the third year in a row by placing first in all three sections of the competition, but was no doubt relieved that some of her closest rivals were absent. Troubled by an old leg injury, Vicki was unable to perform her better jumps in the long program.

Missing from the line-up were Melodie Hilder, due to sickness, and Natasha Viel, a late withdrawal due to a cartilage problem.

Mandy James returned after an absence due to sickness which kept her out of last year's national titles to finish as runner-up in the figures and short program. She maintained this position in the final results, despite placing fourth in the long program. Sharon Gaylard took the Bronze medal.

The big surprise, however, was the performance of the bright-eyed little fourteen-year-old, Diana Zovko. Diana was competing in the senior category only because of a peculiarity in the conditions under which her home state of Victoria awards grants to sportspeople for international competition. She had earlier won the Ladies' Junior Championship from Lorraine McPharlin and Joanna O'Sullivan but didn't qualify for the grant she so badly needed to help her get to Yugoslavia for the Junior World Championship unless she placed in the top eight in the senior competition!

Diana rose to the occasion and traveled back and forth between the two rinks involved in the championship to contest both categories. From seventh place in figures, she hauled herself up with a third in the short program and, despite obvious tiredness after a hectic four days, a brilliant second in the long program to only narrowly miss the senior bronze medal.

The Junior Men's Championship involved a tussle between brothers Kevin and Leslie Boroczky. Leslie topped the short program and free skating ahead of Kevin, but the latter took the gold by dint of a win in figures while Leslie had to haul himself up from fifth. Matthew Monk was third.

A pointer to a bright future for Australian skating was the depth and quality of competition in the Novice ranks. With seventeen girls and thirteen boys competing, it was the largest and strongest novice entry ever. Michael La'Rosa won the Men's section from Stephen Boroczky, the oldest of the three brothers but who pays more attention to his studies than to skating. In third place, earning a standing ovation from an appreciative crowd, was eleven-year-old South Australian boy Sean Abram. Sean demonstrated outstanding ability and style to comfortably win the long program, but it wasn't enough to make up for his seventh placing in the figures.

A similar situation existed in the Ladies' Novice competition. Spirited wins in the short and long programs by Rebecca Threadgold, again accompanied by the plaudits of the crowd, allied to a lowly eighth in the figures were good only for a Bronze medal in the final classification.

Like Sean Abram, however, Rebecca has only two years' coaching behind her but a bright future ahead.

Close behind Rebecca in both short and long programs were Nicole Baurycza and Akiko Hara, Akiko's win in the figures giving her the Gold medal while Nicole, fifth in the figures, took the silver.

The Novice Ice Dancing section also put the spotlight on potential stars of the future with the win going to Monica McDonald and Rodney Clarke after a particularly polished display.

Both the Junior and Senior Pairs competitions were won by Danielle and Stephen Carr. They were unchallenged in the senior division, but had strong competition from another brother and sister combination, Nicole and Rodney Baurycza, in the junior section.

SLIP UP? & how to avoid them.

In a continuing effort to communicate with USFSA membership and Skating Magazine subscribers, this on-going column will attempt to provide answers to many of the problems and confusions that sometimes occur with magazine subscriptions, computer services, rules interpretations, and so on. The following selection was taken from correspondence received at National Headquarters.

If you have any questions pertaining to Association problems, send to Ian Anderson, Skating Magazine, 20 First St., Colorado Springs, CO 80906.

Q. I never received my August or September issues. Please check into it for me.

A. Skating Magazine is published ten times a year, October through July. We do not publish in August or September.

Q. I sent in my change of address in September, but did not receive my October issue. Surely, this is ample time for you to change my address. Please send my missing issue.

A. Unfortunately, it isn't ample time. As with any other computerized subscription service we are tied closely to deadline dates. For example, our system is tied in to the magazine closing dates. The magazine closes August 15th for the October issue; therefore, to ensure that labels will be ready to meet the magazine mailing date in late September, no change of address will make that run if received later than August 30. These dates pertain to the entire yearly production run of Skating. So, remember these important dates: the magazine closes the 15th of each month; the mailing labels the last day of that month. And don't forget also—it takes three or four days to receive and process mail. Mailing a change of address, say on the 28th, will not necessarily guarantee it will make it. If you know your change of address early, mail it in early! If your magazine doesn't arrive at your new address and isn't forwarded by the Postal Service, contact us and we will mail you a magazine. There will be a slight delay in receiving that issue, but you will receive a copy!

Q. I think the policy of allowing only one member of a family to receive Skating Magazine is unfair. I have three daughters who skate, yet only one receives the magazine. Why can't we all get one?

A. You can. There is no policy stating only one member of a household can receive Skating. Interpretation of the official USFSA policy as outlined in Article

XXIV, Section 2, of the USFSA By Laws in the current Rulebook, requires that at least one member of a skating household pays the $10.00 membership fee and receives the magazine. Subsequent members have the option to pay the $10.00 and receive Skating or pay $3.00 and receive a registration card only. The membership renewal card (see below) allows you to exercise this option when you renew your membership.

Second World War and could not leave. Since they refused to skate for Hitler, they were forced to retire from show business. After the War Charlotte and her husband went to the American zone taking only the personal belongings they could carry, leaving their financial possessions behind as most of their monies were banked in Potsdam which later became the Russian zone of Berlin.

Charlotte originated "The Dying Swan" and can be classified as one of the greatest ballerinas on ice.

Today, Charlotte, age eighty-four, resides in a senior citizen apartment in West Berlin.

"Next Best Skater in Philadelphia"

by Tom D. Crouch

There it was, an apparently useless bit of biographical trivia that leaped off the page to capture my attention. Deeply involved in research for a book on the early history of aeronautics in the United States, I was tracing the career of Dr. John Foulke, a Philadelphia physician who built and flew the first unmanned balloon in America on May 10, 1784.

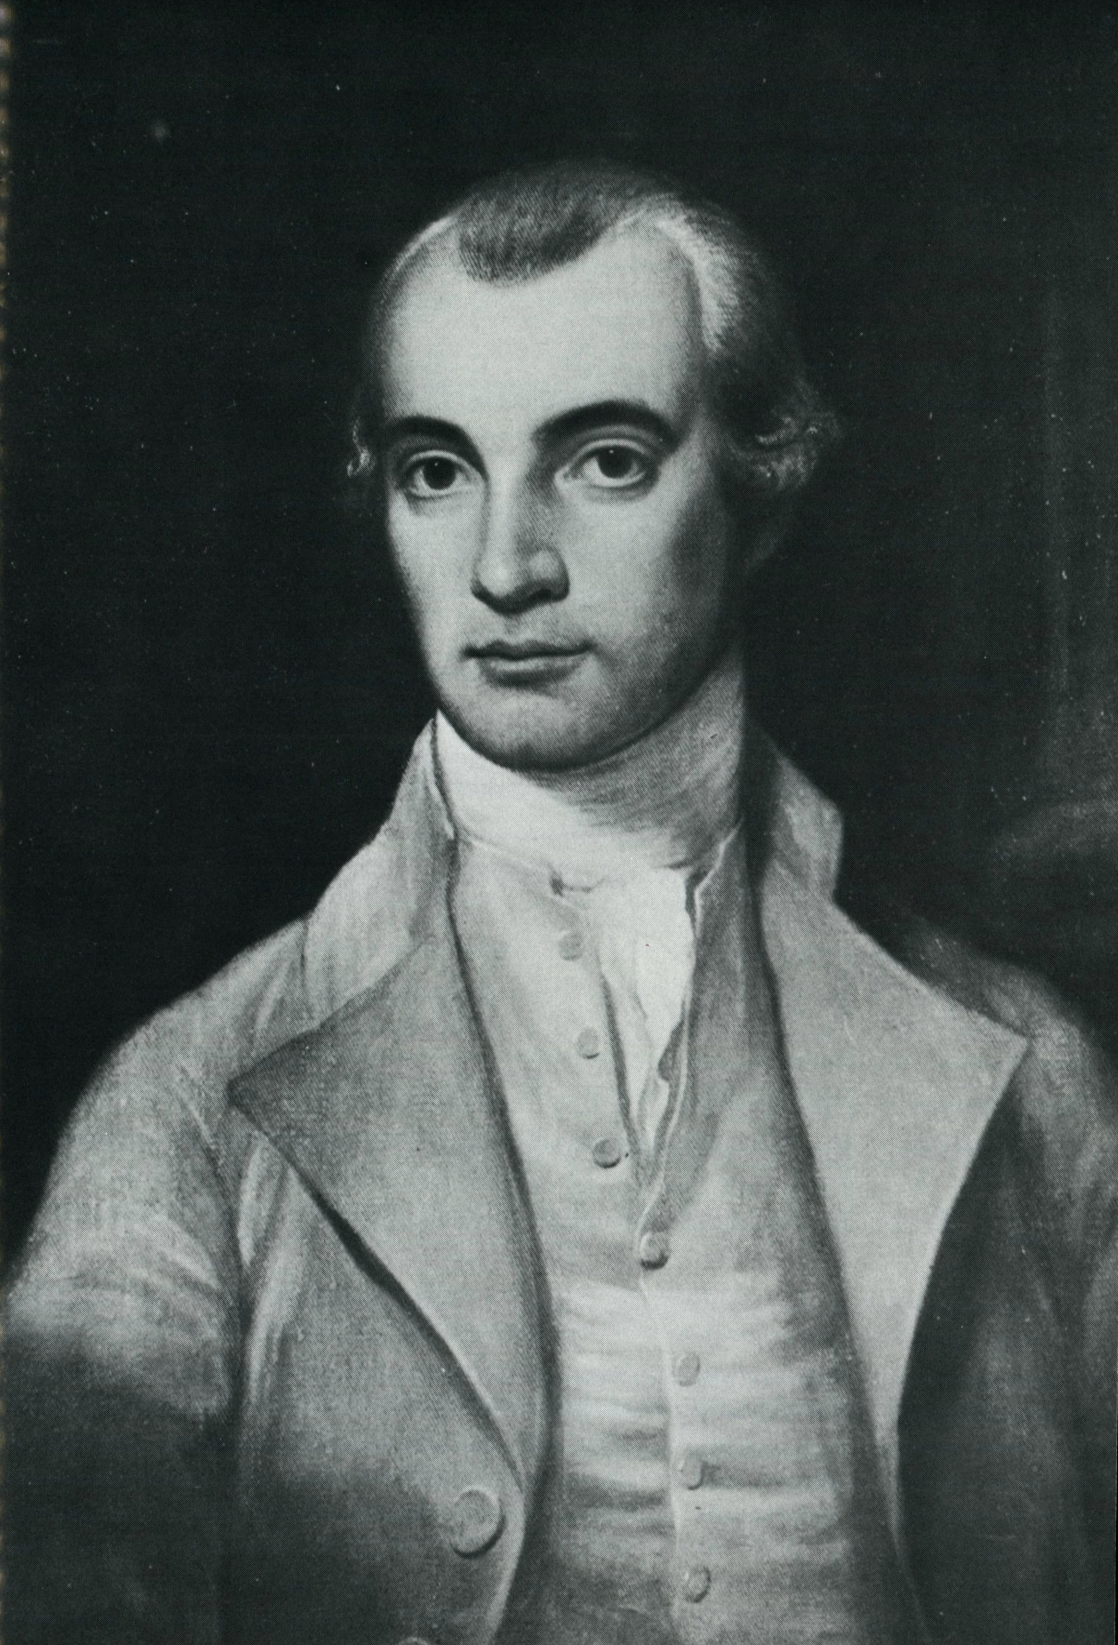

I had already learned a great deal about Foulke. He was born in 1757 and, as an undergraduate at the University of Pennsylvania, had volunteered his services to meet the medical needs of the beleaguered Continental troops encamped at Valley Forge. While completing his studies in Europe he became interested in the reports of the first balloons flown in France in the summer and fall of 1783. Following his return to Philadelphia he lectured on ballooning and delighted the townspeople by flying paper "Air Globes" of up to eight feet in diameter to altitudes of "perhaps three times the height of the neighboring houses."

Now, glancing through a short biographical note published by a Philadelphia antiquarian in 1931, I discovered one more bit of information. It seems that Foulke, in addition to his other accomplishments, was regarded as "the next best skater in the city." The good doctor reportedly skated in the "High Dutch" style, and was famed for his ability to inscribe his name on the ice with his skates.

But those few short lines raised a great many questions. Just what was skating like in the era before the double Salchow and triple Lutz? What was the "High Dutch" style? What did it mean to be the "next best" skater in Philadelphia? If Foulke was not the best, who was? The answers to these questions were not going to be of much value in writing the book on aeronautics, but my curiosity had been piqued. The urge to take a quick look at the early history of skating in Philadelphia was irresistible.

Eighteenth-century Philadelphia, I discovered, had been a skater's paradise. It was a rare winter when the Delaware and Schuylkill Rivers failed to freeze by Christmas. The chroniclers of the period spoke of ox roasts on the "thick ribbed" ice of rivers, and described crowds of "skaters of all colours and sizes mingled together, darting about here and there, upward and downward, mingled and convolved." In addition to the two great rivers, ponds dotted the city, most of them either created by local brick-makers excavation for clay, or by the construction of the raised roads that ran through marshy, low-lying areas of the city. Great Blue House Pond, Neville's Pond, Emerly's Pond, Hudson's Pond, Evans Pond and the collection of small pools extending along the course of Peg's Run were only a few of the spots favored by early Philadelphia skaters.

With all of these opportunities for practice, it was only natural that the City of Brotherly Love should produce an extraordinary number of fine skaters. One well-traveled veteran of the Revolution went so far as to suggest that colonial Philadelphians were "the best and most elegant skaters in the world."

It seems likely that many "High Dutch" European skaters would have disagreed with this assessment. During the late eighteenth century a sharp distinction was drawn between the formal, or "High Dutch," skaters who followed the relatively rigid precepts of elegance established in England and Holland and those who preferred the free form, no holds barred approach that Americans characterized as "low gutter" skating. "High Dutch" was also known as "outer-edge skating." One of the principal rules established for this style required that each stroke constitute a perfect semi-circle.

The real vogue for "High Dutch" skating in Philadelphia came after the Revolution. Prior to that time many observers in the city regarded the style as "a very bad one." According to one critic, "High Dutch" skating appeared jerky, and lacked grace. Every stroke seemed to require extraordinary effort and broke the even flow of motion.

During the years before Independence, John Cadwalader, who would rise to the rank of general in the Pennsylvania militia during the Revolution, was usually regarded as the best skater in Philadelphia. A much less exalted chap, "Massey the baker" and a number of boys from the Quaker school and the Pennsylvania Academy were also renowned for their prowess on the ice.

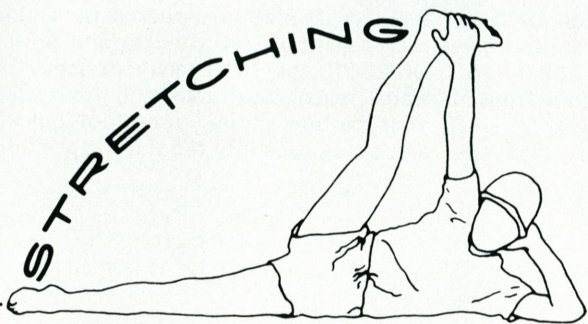

The great age of skating in the city really began after the Revolution, however. With the return of students like John Foulke from abroad, there was renewed interest in "High Dutch" skating. Thomas Mifflin, a post-war governor of Pennsylvania, the artist Charles Wilson Peale, John Foulke, William Thorpe, Joseph Claypoole and George Heyl were among Philadelphia's leading masters of the ice.

George Heyl took the lead among these "gentlemen skaters." Like Foulke, the "next best skater," he specialized in cutting "High Dutch" figures on small patches of open ice.

Watson, the Philadelphia historian, recalled the days when Heyl could be seen "moving about elegantly and perfectly at ease, in curved lines, with folded arms being dressed in a bright red coat (as was the fashion) and buckskin tights, his bright broad skates in an occasional round turn flashing upon the eye; then again to be pursued by others, he might be seen suddenly changing to the back and heel forward movement, offering them his hand and at the same time eluding their grasp by his dexterous and instantaneous deviations to the right and left, leaving them to their hard work of 'striking out' after him with all their might and main."

So this was the fellow who was judged a better skater than Dr. John Foulke. But even Heyl was not the best skater. That honor was generally accorded to an anonymous and spirited black man. "In swiftness," we are told, "he had no competitor; he outstripped the wind." The rapid pumping motion of his arms, timed to the bright flash of the blades of his "low gutter" skates, and the enthusiastic yells that were heard as he sped across the ice were "very imposing in appearance and effect." Here he is at last, the best skater in Philadelphia. Not a gentleman physician or a rich merchant, but a black man, his name lost in the mists of time, who skated for the sheer joy of it.

STRETCHING

by Bob Anderson

I'm happy to say I'll be writing several more articles in the future issues of Skating.

One question I often ask at stretching workshops I give to athletes is "How many of you have sprained an ankle at one time or another?" Usually sixty to seventy percent of the people express that they have. When I ask "How many actually went through a definite rehabilitation program for the sprained ankle?"; only a few respond that they did. When I ask "How many of you still experience problems with your previously sprained ankle even though it has been months or even years since you hurt it?"; this response is usually quite large.

I suspect there are many figure skaters who need extra work to rehabilitate a formerly sprained ankle. After an ankle has been sprained it tends to get weak and lose flexibility. Unless a sprained ankle has undergone good treatment and rehabilitation it probably has never regained its former strength or flexibility.

I believe that strong feet and ankles lead to greater success on the ice. The feeling of self-confidence is heightened through strong feet and ankles. Have you ever seen a person with weak ankles attempt athletic moves with confidence and poise? The ones I've seen are generally tentative, afraid to fully extend themselves. They lack the self-confidence to try the more difficult moves and, as a consequence, progress more slowly if at all.

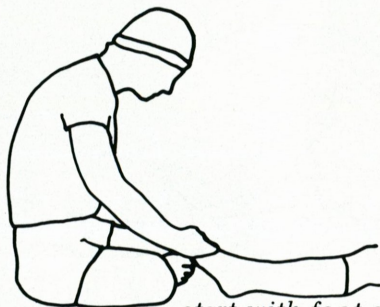

Also, a weak ankle affects balance and makes the body compensate unnaturally in other areas (knee, hip) subjecting these areas to possible injury. I believe it pays high dividends to place special emphasis on maintaining and developing strong and flexible ankles.

In the following are several lower leg stretches and partner ankle exercises. I suggest you do the exercises with a friend who also has a weak ankle or who wants to get stronger. The exercises should be done at least every other day. The stretches should be done gently and easily before and after skating. I'm sure you'll feel the excellent benefits from developing strong, flexible ankles.

Phase 1: Extension of the Ankle & Dorsi-Flexion of the Foot

Have your partner set the palm of his right hand across your toes and on top of your left foot. He should provide medium resistance, so it allows full range of motion for your ankle.

start with foot extended

Extend your ankle at a medium, rhythmical pace against the resistance. By bringing your toes toward your shin (dorsi-flexing), you will be working the front of your lower leg (anterior tibialis).

At first do 20-25 repetitions per set. Your partner should help you by counting silently, while you concentrate on extending your ankle and dorsi-flexing your foot.

Phase 2: Flexing the Ankle and Extending the Foot

Next, have your partner place the palm of his right hand on the ball and toes of your left foot, with his thumb and index finger next to your big toe. Again, your partner should allow your ankle full range of motion, but provide enough resistance to make you concentrate. He should encourage you to use your toes as you push your foot into his hand.

Work on flexing your toes at the end of each repetition for strength and power. Do 20-25 reps. After each movement forward, relax your ankle and foot while your partner pushes your foot quickly and gently back into the starting position.

Phase 3: Inward Movement of the Foot at Ankle Joint

Have your partner place the thumb and index finger of his right hand around the heel of your left foot. He shouldn't hold your heel, but provide a support to keep your leg and ankle fairly stable during the next two phases. The palm of his left hand should be placed on the inside of your left foot.

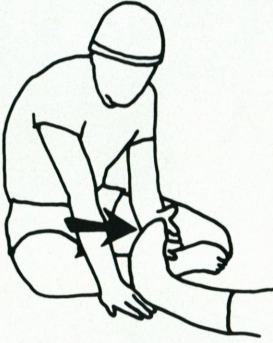

Move your foot in an inward direction, against the mild but constant pressure of his hand. Concentrate on moving at the ankle joint only. Work on a full range of motion. Develop strength. Do 20-25 reps.

Two Partner Stretches

Stretch 1

After you complete 3-4 sets of 20-25 reps each, your partner should gently extend your foot as shown below. Slowly lean forward to stretch the top of your foot. Hold a comfortable stretch for 10-20 seconds.

Phase 4: Outward Movement of the Foot at the Ankle Joint

Stretch 2

To stretch the back of the lower leg, rest your heel on the palm of your partner's hand. He should dorsi-flex your foot and extend your ankle by pushing the ball of your foot toward the front of your lower leg. He will hold your foot in this position, giving a slight stretch to the calf. Hold for 15 seconds. To increase the stretch, slowly bend from the hips, as your partner holds the stretch position. This should help stretch the entire leg even though you may only feel it in your calf. Get a good stretch. Do not strain. Hold 30-40 seconds.

Now rhythmically move your foot in an outward direction. Concentrate on moving your foot at the ankle joint. Develop rhythm, concentrating on the range of motion. Do 20-25 reps.

Working the ankle in all four directions is one set. Do these exercises continuously, 3-4 sets each ankle. As you become stronger, gradually increase the number of repetitions.

New Ice

by: Nora Connors
and Dad

It's cold, it's clean, this world of ice.
That awaits my shining blade.
It's hard, it's smooth, this world of ice
So demanding to be paid.
My muscles ache, to each new demand,
To strike, to jump, to spin.
Figures, laybacks, axels, do them all,
Then do them all again.
Spins and twists and other moves,
When done with style and grace
Catch judges eyes, and their points
And may just win first place.
Yet even though they take no note,
And with fame you are not treated
You're still a winner, anyhow
Because you have competed.

PARENTS — Give this special gift to your young skater !

a book that introduces a new program of simple on and off-ice techniques that work.

- Relieve stress and destructive pressures to produce a calmer, more confident skater.
- Discover how to win at important competitions using visualization and mental preparation.
- Raise vital energy levels necessary for demanding skating routines.
- Eliminate many serious injuries and time-consuming layoffs by means of relaxation techniques.
- Establish a more compatible working relationship between parent and skater by examining some of the new problems facing young people today.

Watch Bill Haggett, Director, Choreographer, Off-ice Pro, on NBC's REAL PEOPLE show in December.

IN TIME TO BE A CHAMPION

HOW TO DISCOVER THE CHAMPION-POWER WITHIN YOU

By Bill Haggett

TENLEY E. ALBRIGHT, M.D.

Two-time world champion figure skater

"It has impressed me how unique Bill Haggett's program is and how lucky we are to have it. I see it as a necessary part of our Olympic Training Centers."
