NEWS BRIEFS

Regina Woodward, formerly of the Philadelphia SC & HS, has teamed with a new ice dance partner, Csaba (pronounced Chubba) Szentpetery of Hungary. The USFSA has released Regina to compete for Hungary since ISU regulations do not allow for bi-country representation of a team. The couple will be coached by Olympic and World Champion, Krisztina Regoczy and will train in Europe and the U.S.

Rachel Meyer and Peter Breen were forced to withdraw from the Golden Spin of Zagreb international team due to Rachel's injury. They were replaced by Lisa Grove and Scott Meyers. Susan Wynne and Joseph Druar also had to withdraw from NHK due to illness. Both teams are back on the ice and should be in top shape for sectionals and Nationals.

Word has been received that Caryn Kadavy has decided to turn pro and will no longer be competing as an amateur. The former World bronze medalist and one of the '80's foremost stylists will be greatly missed by her many fans and admirers.

Lisa Carey, who skated pairs as an amateur with Doug Varvais and as a professional with Chris Harrison, is now associated with Lapin East/West and managing publicity for the new Torvill & Dean and the Russian All Stars tour.

Precision skating takes a giant step this month onto the international scene as nine U.S. teams travel to Helsinki, Finland, and Gothenberg, Sweden, for competition. The U.S. teams include The Cutting Edge (novice) from Stone Mountain FSC in Georgia; the Eisettes (novice) of the SC of Northern Virginia in Oakton; the Fraserettes (senior) and the Fraser Juniores (junior) from Fraser FSC, Warren, Michigan; the Goldenettes (senior) of the Garfield Heights FSC of Ohio; and the Mini-Minneapplettes (novice), the Minneapplettes (junior) and the Minneapple Corps (adult team who will exhibit only) from the FSC of Minneapolis; and the Shoreliners (junior) from the St. Clair Shores FSC in Michigan. This will be one of the first truly international meets ever to be held, with hopes that ISU will take a serious look at "group skating" for future considerations.

Randy Gardner will choreograph the Knott's Berry Farm Christmas show in California. This is Randy's first venture into full production choreography, and based on his vast list of credits, no one would seem to be more qualified or creative.

Randy and partner Tai Babilonia will be making a guest appearance on the Bob Newhart Show. The episode was filmed December 1 and will be aired early next year.

This season, Ice Capades celebrates its 50th Anniversary. This world-renowned show has brought on-ice entertainment to millions of people throughout the country, launched the professional careers of some of the world's most respected performers, and has introduced and inspired many of today's current competitors. All of us, either as youngsters or adults, at one time or another have enjoyed the beauty and lavish productions of Ice Capades through the years. Happy birthday . . . and thanks.

A special gala was held last month at Loew's Santa Monica Beach Hotel to celebrate Ice Capades 50th Anniversary. Stars and performers from past and present companies gathered to reminisce and toast continued success and long life to Ice Capades.

Wedding bells will be ringing soon for Canadian National Champion and 1988 Olympic silver medalist, Elizabeth Manley and Paul Hendrickson of St. Paul, Minnesota. The couple are now planning a July 1990 wedding in Ottawa, Liz's hometown. She is currently on tour as the star of Ice Capades, and Paul is associated with the Naked Zoo, a theatrical production firm that, among other things, works with Tom Collins on the Tours of Olympic and World Champions.

Speaking of Manley, Macmillan Publishing of Canada has just completed arrangements for the publication of her autobiography that will be co-authored with Elva Clairmont, who also worked on the Toller Cranston book a few years ago. Publication is planned for next fall.

"CARMEN" ON ICE

The filming of the ice ballet Carmen has been completed in Seville, Spain. The film stars Katarina Witt as Carmen, Brian Boitano as Don Jose, and Brian Orser as Escamillo, and also features Renee Roca and Yvonne Gomez in supporting roles.

Unlike other ice ballets that have been filmed entirely in a studio with sets and special lighting, major sections of Carmen are being shot on location with some innovative exterior skating sequences. For example, the bullfight sequence was actually shot in and around an actual la corrida (a bull ring) and another sequence, as in the opera, outside of the tobacco factory where Carmen works.

Portable rinks were buried at ground level, and the ice was painted to match the surrounding earth. Using this unusual technique, scenes were shot outside against the authentic natural architectural beauty of the old city in the setting of the original opera.

Considering the attention to detail and the creativity that has gone into the planning and filming, Carmen would seem likely to be one of the most important productions in recent years and is eagerly awaited.

The ice ballet was choreographed by Sandra Bezic of Canada, with Michael Siebert as assistant choreographer, and is being filmed by and with an international company. Tentatively, the premiere has been scheduled for theatrical release February 15 in Europe. Discussions are now underway for theatrical showings in both Los Angeles and New York. National release is not planned at this time, but there is an excellent possibility that the production will be seen on HBO sometime early this spring. Exact dates will be announced when they are known.

M'm! M'm! Good!

Susan Wynne and Joseph Druar, 1988 Olympians and 1989 U.S. Dance Champions, have been selected as "spokesathletes" for the year for Campbell's Soups, national sponsor of the U.S. Figure Skating Team.

"Susie and Joe are a great team," said Dale Thompson, Marketing Manager, Campbell's Condensed Soups. "Even though they are two individuals, they are a perfect match—much like soup and figure skating."

Susie, 24, and Joe, 27, currently train in Colorado Springs with coaches Sandra Hess and Phillip Mills at the U.S. Air Force Academy. Susie is a part-time student at Colorado College, Colorado Springs, and Joe is a graduate of St. Joseph's University, Philadelphia, with a degree in marketing.

Campbell's Soups has been involved with figure skating almost as long as Susie and Joe have been partners. "Campbell's Soups has played an important role in our careers, through its sponsorships of the U.S. Team and they have helped in our support since we were young skaters," Joe explained. "We're honored to have an opportunity to show our appreciation."

Campbell's Soups became the first national sponsor of the USFSA in 1982 and the relationship has been extended through 1994. Campbell provides financial assistance and promotional support for figure skaters on the local, regional, and national levels. Their support not only reaches the U.S. World Team but other ranked competitors and USFSA skaters at every level nationwide.

As spokespersons, Susie and Joe will make public appearances and participate in various activities throughout the year.

YOUNG READERS

Spend a very special day with an American Champion.

A completely new and delightfully different kind of book, up close and personal. Come along and share with U.S. Ladies' Champion Jill Trenary one special day in her life—the final day of her competition at the 1988 Olympics in Calgary.

This is the story of that momentous day—in Jill's own words and dramatic on-the-spot photographs that capture all the pageantry, pressure, tension, and triumphs behind the cameras and bright lights.

SKATE AMERICA '89

by Gerri Walbert

Scott Hamilton, Olympic and four-time world champion, star and co-producer of Stars On Ice, added another role to his ever-expanding career as he played host at the October 19 Opening Ceremonies of Campbell's Soups' Skate America '89 in Indianapolis, Indiana.

Hamilton was in town for "Skate with Scott," a free clinic for beginner skaters ages 7 to 12 on October 18 at the Pan American Plaza. Five hundred children enrolled in the two hour-long classes and were thrilled to learn from one of the world's foremost skaters.

"Celebrate America" was the theme of the '89 Skate America competition, and Hamilton dedicated his performance of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" to the memory of the U.S. World Team killed in the airplane crash in 1961.

"This is a competition I'm very familiar with," Hamilton said nostalgically. He won the original Norton Skate in 1979 then Skate America again in 1981 and 1982. "The first time pretty much assured me of a place on the (1980) Olympic team. It was the first time I was really noticed. It's great to be back, plus the competition is going to be exciting—basically a mini-worlds."

National champions Jill Trenary, Christopher Bowman, Kristi Yamaguchi, and Rudi Galindo headed a 16 member American team and a total of 56 participants from 14 countries were on hand to compete in the four divisions.

The City of Indianapolis provided an unseasonably cold and snowy reception in the first few days, but the weather improved along with the competition, and visitors were able to explore some of the city's famed midwestern hospitality. The century old Union Station was a popular spot. Renovated in 1986, it has become a "festival marketplace" with over 100 shops and eateries. The Indianapolis Zoo, also recently renovated, was the site for the Official Draw Party. The competitors were treated to a whale and dolphin show in the country's only totally enclosed environmentally controlled water pavilion.

Thanks to the efforts of the 1989 Skate America organizing committee, the event ran relatively hassle-free. Hotels were within walking distance, buses were plentiful and ran frequently.

The competition itself did not lack for excitement. There were many wonderful performances, a few surprises, and a small storm of controversy particular to the dance event. Unfortunately, attendance was sparse for most of the events with the exception of the always popular Exhibition finale.

This was the first time in its eight-year history that Skate America did not feature a figures competition. According to Claire Ferguson, Chairperson of the USFSA Skate America Sub-Committee, "The decision to eliminate compulsory figures was made a year earlier than expected in order to keep expenses down and help make the competition financially stable."

Therefore, the singles and pairs events consisted of an original program with eight required elements valued at 33 1/3% and a free skating final valued at 66 2/3%. Only one compulsory dance was skated.

The Men

Current World champion, Canadian Kurt Browning, and World silver medalist and defending Skate America champion, Christopher Bowman, were set for their first showdown since the World Championships in Paris last March. To make the event even more interesting, Olympic and World bronze medalist Viktor Petrenko of the Soviet Union was in attendance to throw his hat into the ring.

National contenders Erik Larson and the 1989 U.S. Olympic Festival gold medalist, Mark Mitchell also hoped to challenge for a medal.

Skating positions in the draw for the original program had Petrenko in the first group; Bowman, Larson, and Mitchell in the second group; and Browning in the third.

Of the top contenders, Mitchell skated the cleanest program with a double flip/triple toe combination and a lovely triple loop. He received a second-place vote from the U.S. judge, but the lower level of difficulty in his routine placed him fourth with most of the panel. He was, however, in striking distance for a medal.

Larson had an unfortunate showing, doubling his planned triple loop to triple toe combination, plus a fall out of his triple flip. His relatively good marks for style placed him sixth.

Petrenko's hot and sexy presentation to "See You Later, Alligator" was an audience-pleaser. His opening triple Axel/double toe combination was very high, and his death drop superb. Although he double-footed the single triple Axel, he took first place overall.

In contrast, Browning's new original jazz piece seemed unexciting. The combination was placed late in the program. He stepped out of the triple Axel and completed a three turn before going into the double toe. The double Axel was a little low but did not affect his marks for presentation as he placed second.

Bowman had the most unusual and creative original program. Wearing a stunning black and turquoise Indian design costume, he incorporated American Indian dance moves to music composed by Carl Fisher entitled "Ceremonial War Dance."

The number was quite beautiful and appeared formidable with a clean triple Axel/double toe combination, but a fall-out on his triple flip at the end of his program dropped him to third going into the final.

Since the free skate was worth double the original program, any one of the top three men could win the gold medal. Of the other U.S. contenders, only Mitchell had the opportunity to pull an upset for a medal position and he almost succeeded.

Skating to Roger Miller's "King of the Road," Mitchell's seven-triple long program brought him a standing ovation as well as excellent marks. He performed the program with ease, but lost the bronze medal in a four/three decision to Kurt Browning, ending up fourth.

Larson's long program to Puccini themes showed off his excellent stroking abilities. A nice elongated spiral and a spread eagle worthy of Brian Boitano were some of the program's highlights. His jumps were off, and he remained in sixth place for the event.

Browning retained his winning long program from Paris, but had his share of problems this time. His famous quad was unsuccessful and his usually strong triple jumps were popped, doubled, or two-footed, weakening the program's impact with the audience. Four of the judges thought it good enough to give him the bronze medal.

"I'm disappointed to lose, but I had a great learning experience today," Browning said after the event, "I know what to work on when I go home."

Sitting in first place, Petrenko had the opportunity to redeem his disappointing sixth-place showing at Worlds last March. He has a lovely new classical program which suits his balletic style, opening with an incredibly high triple Axel to double toe combination then on to another triple Axel. All his energy was concentrated on those first moves. The program then began to diminish in intensity and strength. Though he completed only four triples, the Soviet and Japanese judges placed him first. The majority of the panel placed him second overall and he settled for the silver medal.

Christopher Bowman reprised his "Tico Tico" long program from 1984 but with new choreography, spins, and upgraded jumps. What did not change was the audience response. They loved it.

Bowman's expressive Samba gave way to a standing ovation. He completed both difficult combinations—a triple Axel/double toe, and a triple Lutz/triple toe along with four other clean triples. The only miss in his sizzling performance was a triple loop midway thru the program.

Bowman was pleased to have successfully defended his title and to be skating so well early in the season. "This means a great deal to me," he said happily. "More than winning—it meant improvement. I felt I skated to my potential."

The Ladies

Eleven competitors from nine countries opened the ladies' event, including the gymnastic Surya Bonaly of France, Simone Lang of the German Democratic Republic, and Junko Yaginuma of Japan. But the attention was focused on the strong U.S. team of Jill Trenary, Tonya Harding, and Nancy Kerrigan—with hopes of an American sweep of the medals.

The results of the original program certainly pointed in that direction, but the placements were a little surprising.

Harding, the 1989 National bronze medalist, came into the original program with an air of determination. Of the eight required elements, Harding's death drop in her Lone Ranger routine had to be one of the best in the entire competition. She used the difficult triple Lutz for her combination and double-footed it slightly before going into the double toe. It was barely noticeable, however, and only one judge caught it. The rest of her program was clean, and Harding received five first-place votes to take the lead.

Skating after Harding and Bonaly, Jill Trenary looked lovely but appeared nervous and it showed with a shaky triple toe combination that ended in a single toe loop. Her layback was nice, but her flying sit spin was quite low and the judges penalized her heavily in technical merit. Her style marks were also affected with the highest mark a 5.7 from the U.S. judge. Her program was the same from last year and though not as well performed, she was still able to hold on to second place going into the final.

Kerrigan placed third with a very nice performance to original music composed by Mark Militano. She completed a solid double toe/triple toe combination and an engaging spiral sequence to complete an American sweep of the top three spots after the original program.

Kerrigan said she was very happy to be in medal contention at this point in the competition and was hopeful that she could continue skating well for the long program the next day.

Simone Lang performed more than competently in the original program with a solid Salchow to double toe combination in a Samba routine that placed her fourth. Skating to Spartacus, France's jumping phenomenon Surya Bonaly fell on the triple Lutz of her combination, placing eighth for the O.P., which effectively put her out of medal contention position.

Bonaly did much better in the final with a program that had difficult content. Although some of her triple jumps were landed poorly, she did complete five of them including two jump combinations. Her artistic marks were considerably lower than those for technical merit, but she placed fourth for the long program and finished sixth overall.

Trenary was the first of the leaders to take to the ice in the final free skate. Although she was anxious to show off her new long program with a middle-eastern theme, it was not the strongest position for her to skate. She went after every one of the five triples planned in the program but was only able to complete the trademark one-foot Axel to triple Salchow. Her style marks were disappointingly low, but mistakes by other skaters allowed her to hold on to second place and take home the silver medal.

Following on Trenary's heels, Harding was seemingly unaffected by the problems of her predecessor. This night she could do no wrong. Even her music was powerful—the haunting score from the movie, Batman. She completed five triples including triple loop to double toe along with a series of three double Axels in a row and even attempted a triple Axel in the middle of the program. It was not successful, but the miss did not detract from the rest of her achievements. The audience gave her fine effort a standing ovation and she received first-place marks from the entire panel of judges to become the surprise gold medalist in the ladies' event.

"I think this is one of my best performances," she said enthusiastically. "I have a new style now. It's more positive. I'm very happy with my skating."

Kerrigan had to follow the award-winning number and experienced the same kind of problems that plagued Trenary. It was tough to buy a triple jump, and she completed only a triple toe, doubling or singling every other triple. Her sixth placement here dropped her out of medal territory and she finished in fifth place overall.

Lang's performance wasn't appreciatively better than Kerrigan's, but a triple Salchow combination and another clean triple toe was sufficient to garner the bronze medal.

The Pairs

Several late-minute scratches occurred in the pairs division leaving only six teams from four countries to compete. Though the entrants were few, the quality was high. Last year's winners, Natalia Mishkutenok and Artur Dmitriev returned to defend their title. The Canadians sent Michelle Menzies and Kevin Wheeler and Stacey Ball and Jean-Michel Bombardier, and the strong team of Peggy Schwarz and Alexander Koenig from the German Democratic Republic were there for the first time.

Jeanne Miley & Michael Verlich, USA

Elizabeth Punsalan & Jerod Swallow, USA

Sharon Carz and Doug Williams, 1989 U.S. Olympic Festival silver medalists, were unable to attend due to a sprain suffered by Carz just days before the competition. But the new team of Karen Courtland and David Goodman joined national pairs champions Kristi Yamaguchi and Rudi Galindo representing the United States.

Yamaguchi and Galindo drew first to skate in the original program and experienced opening jitters with a few minor errors in the pair combination spin, but otherwise presented a clean program to music from Firebird and 2001 to place third.

Mishkutenok and Dmitriev followed with another innovative routine. Mishkutenok's double Axel was a little weak, but the program was strong in all the other elements. They received great audience response for their presentation and unanimous first-place marks as well.

Courtland and Goodman were off on their side-by-side sit spins and he touched down on the double Axel, but the rest of their routine was clean. They placed sixth.

Fourth in the 1989 Canadian Nationals, Menzies and Wheeler were hoping to improve their rankings with a good showing here. The combination spin was very nice as was the side-by-side camel spin that worked into sit spins, but Menzies fell on the double Axel and they finished fifth.

Schwarz and Koenig's speed in the original program was awesome, but they fell out of the overhead lift, yet moved into second position. Stacey Ball and Jean-Michel Bombardier were surprisingly good for a team not long out of the junior ranks, skating an audience-pleasing routine that put them fourth going into the long program.

Menzies and Wheeler were first to skate in the final and presented a very good program with clean side-by-side double Axels, a throw triple Salchow, throw double Axel, and a double flip/double toe combination. They placed third in the long and just out of the medals at fourth overall.

Courtland and Goodman again had some problems with timing and unison. She fell out of a split triple twist and an overhead star lift variation and they stayed in sixth place overall.

Skating to "Rhapsody In Blue," Ball and Bombardier had some nice moves with a strong throw double Axel that had great distance and side-by-side Axels in combination with double toe loops. Their split twist was very high but only a double. Though they were fifth overall, they show potential.

Mishkutenok and Dmitriev were next. Skating to Russian music, they put on an acrobatic show that mesmerized the audience. Upside down spins, unique entrances and exits into death spirals and overhead lifts, plus very powerful throw triples overshadowed the weaker singles elements. They received five first-place marks to successfully defend their title.

Yamaguchi and Galindo followed with an even stronger presentation to "Escape to Copelia" by Dbilibes. Dressed in gorgeous pink and cream outfits, they opened with a fast triple twist, side-by-side triple flips, a throw triple Salchow, and side-by-side triple toe/double toe combination. Their overhead lifts and spin combinations were not as innovative and the speed did not match that of the Soviet pair, but otherwise they were superior and received a standing ovation for this performance. Only the French and Canadian judges placed them first, so they had to settle for the silver medal.

Nevertheless Yamaguchi and Galindo were happy with the result as it places them among the top teams in possible contention for a medal in the upcoming World Championships.

Schwarz and Koenig's long program was a disappointment with bad falls on triple toe loops and problems on the lifts. Their combination spins are the fastest and closest of all the competitors which makes them exciting to watch. They placed fourth in the free skate, but third overall for the bronze medal.

The Dancers

The dance event had ten participants from eight countries headed by World silver medalists Maia Usova and Alexander Zhulin from the Soviet Union. The U.S. team consisted of national silver medalists April Sargent and Russ Witherby, U.S. Olympic Festival silver medalists Jeanne Miley and Michael Verlich, and the new team of Elizabeth Punsalan and Jerod Swallow.

There was only one compulsory dance—the Paso Doble—and the marks varied over 1.2 points per individual couple, so there was a marked disagreement among the panel of judges. The results left Usova and Zhulin in first, Sargent and Witherby in second, and Dominique Yvon and Frederic Palluel of France in third. Americans Miley and Verlich and Punsalan and Swallow were sixth and seventh respectively.

The original set pattern dance was the Samba and there were many variations. The best belonged to Usova and Zhulin despite a small slip. It was hot, fast, and sexy. Their head-to-toe gold lamé costumes proved distracting and the judges did deduct points in presentation, but they had no problem holding on to first place.

The second-best Samba was that of Punsalan and Swallow. Their "Hot, Hot, Hot" was just that and performed very well. They have only been working together since spring but have similar coloring and body build and look good together on the ice. Though they have had no national or international experience as a team, their presentation did move them up a notch to sixth.

Miley and Verlich's "Sumba Ceitio" used the slowest acceptable beat for a Samba and was very expressive, but during the middle of the program, Miley's foot hooked around Verlich's leg and they suffered a bad fall, which dropped their placement to seventh.

Wearing unusually somber black and silver striped costumes for a Samba, Sargent and Witherby's "Rhythm Is Going To Get You" was not only uneventful, but unexciting. They did not appear to be having any fun at all. The strength of their skating ability kept them in second place.

Canada's Jo-Anne Borlase and Martin Smith moved up a notch on the strength of their Samba, while Yvon and Palluel dropped to fourth.

The dance final left many in the audience wondering what each of the couples were trying to convey in their abstract or avant-garde numbers. Some judges were also dissatisfied with the material presented at the dance final. When one of the trial judges was asked his initial reaction to the dance event, the reply was a bald, "What dance event?"

The only really appreciative program came from Miley and Verlich whose very danceable routine included music from Cole Porter, Hoge Carmichael, and John Williams' version of "Swing, Swing, Swing." The two know how to communicate with the audience and received a standing ovation and a third and fourth placement from the American and Canadian judges, and several fifth placements, and moved to sixth place overall. Punsalan and Swallow had some minor partner difficulties in their free dance and their middle-eastern routine lost direction about midway through the program, but look for this new team to improve. They finished seventh overall.

Jo-Anne Borlase and Martin Smith's "Scherezade" was performed competently, but again the costumes were visually distracting. The judges marks were varied but left them with an overall third placement and a bronze medal for the event.

Skating to Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2," Sargent and Witherby's classical presentation was not sharp. A fall and a problem with a lift did not help them. The marks were low for this caliber of competitor, but they held on to the second spot and a silver medal.

Usova and Zhulin's variation of a Tango in their concertina free dance was skillfully done, and wonderfully dramatic, but again, they had problems communicating with the audience. They were, however, the best dancers in the competition and had no difficulty in winning the gold medal.

JILL TRENARY

Facing the End of An Era

by Gerri Walbert

United States ladies' figure skating champion, 21-year-old Jill Trenary, of Minnetonka, Minnesota may not look all that tough with her delicate beauty and graceful style, but she has had her share of adversity in the sport. In November 1984 she suffered a serious injury to her leg when she was spiked at a practice session. The immediate outlook seemed bleak for a skater with a very promising career, but rehabilitation and a strong desire to continue to compete drove Trenary back to the ice.

Looking back now, Trenary is amazed that she was able to come back so quickly. "It was a great accomplishment for me to work so hard and come back that year and be fifth at Nationals. I was a champion just for doing that alone."

Drive and determination moved her up the ladder in successive years and in 1987 she won the U.S. ladies' title in an upset victory over the then World champion Debi Thomas. "I was the underdog," Trenary recalls, "so winning in 1987 was very exciting. Brian Boitano pulled me aside at the competitors' party that evening and said, 'Let me just tell you something. When you win it the second time that's when you really feel good about yourself.'

"I wondered why he was telling me this, but when I won in Baltimore, I remembered that conversation. He was right."

At the Nationals in Baltimore last February, Trenary entered the competition as the favorite but at the same time had to deal with another youthful contender. Kristi Yamaguchi, 18, of Fremont, California, began chipping away at Trenary's lead with a bag full of difficult triple jumps. She was also stealing the attention. The media immediately dubbed Yamaguchi skating's new ice princess.

Trenary coped with the pressure of being the favorite and eventually won the national title with two strong performances. It wasn't easy, however, to share the spotlight with the bright newcomer. "The crowd loves the underdog," she says philosophically, "that's okay. I was the underdog once and I had that glory. Now I'm on top and they are chasing after me."

And if she's learned one thing, Trenary says, it's that the media is your friend only when you're on top. She doesn't believe in reading her press notices any more. "If it's good, don't get all excited," she now advises, "because the next day it could be bad."

Besides mounting pressure from younger skaters at home, Trenary went to the World Figure Skating Championships in Paris to meet the queen of triple jumps—Japan's Midori Ito.

"I was skating extremely well after Nationals. I felt good about my win and felt good about Worlds. But I didn't feel quite as much pressure really. I wasn't the total favorite and I like that a little bit better."

Being in the same practice sessions with Ito every day didn't help to bolster Trenary's confidence. She went home every night telling herself that although she couldn't compete with Ito's triple Axel, she did have style and beauty.

"Midori is incredible," Trenary admits. "She is the most talented technical skater ever. Everyone agrees with that and obviously it distracted me a little bit."

Trenary held the lead after the original program, but eventually lost the competition to Ito. Still, she says she feels good about her performance there. "I did have a disappointing injury ten days before and that obviously throws you off as far as training goes . . . but I'll be proud of that bronze medal because it's still third in the world. I did a very good short program and I felt I handled myself well through the whole thing."

The sport's changing face has placed increased importance on athletic prowess and triple jumps. Beauty and style, a mainstay of ladies' skating in previous years, seems to have disappeared from the scene. Trenary, a product of that era feels caught in a time warp. She is athletic, but no gymnast.

"I think the public likes to see beautiful girls, maturing women out there being artistic but also doing the technical jumps. I think that combined ability is what makes figure skating so popular a sport to watch."

The last remnant of the sport's original structure is also disappearing. After July 1990, compulsory figures will be no more. This is the last year for their inclusion in national and international events and Trenary is more than a little sad to see them go.

"My figures used to be horrendous when I was young," she says, "and I can't believe now that I love them. I really do. I enjoy working on them and I don't like this change. I'm a better skater with the figures, and it will be more difficult for me without them."

A disappointing showing at the recent Skate America, reflected her feelings about the coming changes in the sport. It was her first international competition of the season. She had cancelled out of Skate Electric the first week of October because her music wasn't ready yet. Skate America two weeks later, however, had eliminated figures for the first time in its eight-year history.

Trenary kept the triple toe in her original program because she felt comfortable with the easier combination. "(The judges) are looking for that clean combination with flow . . . I just think the cleanest and most polished program is going to win."

But a mistake in the original program without a twenty-percent buffer from compulsory figures is deadly—and hardly a confidence builder. Trenary lost both free skating programs and the competition to teammate Tonya Harding, but the upcoming Nationals in Salt Lake City, Utah, as well as the World Figure Skating Championships in Halifax, Nova Scotia in March will retain the figure event one last time.

Doomsayers were predicting that Trenary would turn professional after the 1989 season, and although she admits that she did consider it briefly, she is a realist and knows that with compulsory figures she still has a shot at a World gold medal.

"I am really looking forward to Nationals, I can tell you," Trenary says with a sigh of relief, "when I have figures and get off to that start. I really have a good long program this year and it's something totally different. The music is not classical—it's very different—kind of middle-eastern and the end is salsa. I feel it fits me better.

"And I feel with a triple flip and four other triples I can really give (Ito) a run for the money. That's just my goal period—to go out there and do a program like that. If I get third, then I have to be happy because that's all I can do. If I can do that five triple program with style, well, we'll see what happens."

Trenary is hesitant about saying whether this will be her last year as an amateur, but she does not hesitate to state her feelings on the sport's future.

"I don't like the way the sport is changing," she says wistfully. "I wish figures would stay in. I wish they wouldn't be talking about allowing the pros to compete in Olympics."

"How can you judge Dorothy Hamill, America's sweetheart, a skater absolutely everyone adores against Midori Ito? How do you do that? They are so different. Dorothy had her time in the spotlight and I feel that (the Olympics) is what all the amateur skaters work for and they should have their chance."

Trenary has faced adversity in it's physical manifestation, but the challenges that face her now have more to do with the end of a skating era. She has always been a tough competitor and she says she's not about to leave the sport until she feels she's ready.

"I have just turned 21, and I have accomplished so much," she reflects. "I'm going to have to go down the road and tackle new goals some time. This could be my last year, but I don't want to make that decision right now."

"I put so much into figure skating for so many years. I want to end happy. If it's gold or if it's fifth place—it's not the medal, but how I feel inside. One day I will wake up in the morning and I'll know what's right."

SPORTS MEDICINE SEMINAR

Competitive figure skaters strive for perfection in technique, artistry, strength, and fitness. Since the judging of figure skating is subjective, competitors have strong concerns for how their body compositions will be perceived by judges and audiences.

You can learn more about how this relates to nutrition and a positive body image at the eighth annual Campbell's Soups Sports Medicine Seminar. An official function of the upcoming U.S. Figure Skating Championships, the seminar has been highly commended for offering valuable, practical advice that benefits figure skaters. The seminar will be moderated by Morton Rosenstein, M.D., new chairman of the USFSA Sports Medicine Committee, and will feature renowned sports medicine professionals and other experts discussing the latest information on nutrition, behavior modification, and exercise physiology. A question and answer session will follow.

The speakers include:

- Caryn Kadavy, professional figure skater, 1988 Olympic Team and 1986-1988 World Team member, will discuss the rewards of adopting a healthy attitude towards nutritious dieting and share her skating experiences;
- F. Xavier Pi-Sunyer, M.D., Director of Obesity Research Center, New York City, will focus on the nutritional and weight concerns of athletes and explain how body fat is distributed;

- Mark Rindflesh, M.D., clinical psychiatrist, Salt Lake City, will discuss behavior modification and explain the psychological problems associated with a poor body image, and the physical dangers of eating disorders, such as anorexia and bulimia nervosa; and

WORRIED ABOUT YOUR WEIGHT? GAINING CONTROL TO KEEP YOUR EDGE

by
Suzanne Nelson Steen, M.S., R.D.
and
Kelly D. Brownell, Ph.D.

As you step onto the ice to compete, many thoughts race through your mind. Aside from concentrating on the spins and jump combinations you have planned in your program, you may wonder how you look. Since figure skating is a subjective sport, competitors have strong concerns how their appearances will be perceived by judges and audiences. As a result, skaters strive for perfection in technique, artistry, strength, and body shape.

Gradual weight loss and exercise helps to reduce excess fat and increase muscle. However, some athletes may follow strict diets or use other unhealthy weight loss methods to lose weight faster. These "crash" methods include fasting, restricting food and fluids, and using a sauna. Of even greater concern is the use of more extreme methods—such as vomiting, laxatives, and diuretics.

When an athlete seeks to reach an unrealistic weight by not eating, most of the lost weight is muscle and water, not fat. When weakness and fatigue results, just getting through practice can become difficult. In addition, extreme dieting can impair the ability to concentrate, making patch time frustrating.

Athletes must realize that weight is important only as it relates to body composition. The amount of fat and muscle makes the difference in performance and appearance, not simply weight. How can you determine what percent of your body is fat and what is lean tissue i.e. muscle?

Two common methods for evaluating body composition are underwater weighing and skinfold thickness measurements. Underwater weighing is based on the principle that fat is less dense than water, so it will float. Your weight underwater is used to calculate the amount of fat and muscle that you have.

Campbell's® Soups

FOR THOUGHT

Measuring skinfold thickness is done with special calipers. Measurements are taken at specific places on the body, such as the back of your arm over your triceps muscle, or at the middle of your thigh. The percent of body fat is then calculated based upon the skinfold measurements taken at the different sites. These should be done by a trained health professional.

This is where most athletes ask, "What percent of body fat is best for me?" In general, female athletes vary from 10 to 20 percent fat. Male athletes typically range from 4 to 12 percent fat. It is not advisable to establish a specific weight or fat percentage for a given sport or athlete. Instead, it is preferable to establish a range of values and then monitor performance and health within that range, not at a specific number.

For some athletes, losing weight in pursuit of the ideal becomes an all-consuming obsession. It is important to keep a weight loss effort in perspective and to maintain a positive body image.

Compulsive weight loss behaviors may be triggered by a variety of factors. For example, crash dieting may be prompted by an unrealistic weight goal or an intense desire to succeed, coupled with a fear of failure. A seemingly harmless remark by a coach or parent about appearing "too fat" might also trigger crash dieting.

Sports-related demands and pressures to be lean go beyond the physical and emotional challenges already faced by a young skater. As a person grows, the body will mature, and as part of the natural process, fat tissue will increase. In addition to these physical changes, the skater is also developing an identity and responding to outside pressures. Television and fashion magazines over-emphasize the importance of beauty and thinness for success and popularity. For the goal-oriented athlete, the inability to control weight can lead to a sense of frustration, guilt, despair, and failure. Any of these factors may set the stage for an eating problem.

Eating disorders have been reported in various groups of athletes, especially those where thinness is emphasized. One such disorder is anorexia nervosa, which is a compulsion to become very thin, characterized by self-induced starvation, distortions in body image, and an intense fear of weight gain. Another disorder called bulimia nervosa is characterized by recurring episodes of binge eating and purging, in which vomiting, laxative abuse, and intense exercise are used to avoid weight gain. These are very serious disorders that require professional help.

It is important to identify the weight range that is most comfortable for you. By measuring body fat and following a nutritious diet, you may reach a weight range that works best for you. Ask these questions. What enables you to compete at your optimal level? How can you best present your program to the judges and audience while feeling good about yourself? When performance declines, you may be below an optimal level. In addition, be aware of factors that make you feel pressured to achieve an unreasonable weight.

Adopt a healthy attitude towards dieting and fat loss. Continue to train hard and fuel your body with high carbohydrate, low fat foods. Lose excess fat gradually so you do not compromise your strength and stamina. Above all, maintain a realistic weight and positive body image. Doing so will give you that competitive edge on and off the ice!

Suzanne Nelson Steen, M.S., R.D., is a sports nutritionist at the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine and a former figure skater. Kelly D. Brownell, Ph.D. is a professor in the Department of Psychiatry at the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine.

THE BODY OF DANCE

by Keith Lichtman

ICE

Dancing

How we envy the dancer who travels so effortlessly across the ice—floating like a swan, gracing the surface with his or her presence. Are hard work, perseverance, and good coaching the only ingredients that formulate our ideal dancer? There remains one factor that often overrides all others: genetics and its effect on the human body.

Anatomical structure can play havoc on ice dancers or bless them with fine skills and artistry. The Blues choctaw that is accomplished so silently and smoothly, and the Rhumba choctaws that are conquered so effortlessly usually belong to the advantaged few with open hips. Additionally, the exit edge of a three turn, mohawk, or rocker is more easily “checked back” by an open hip. The fight for control and good position is far less with a body that is willing to cooperate.

Genetics truly plays a vital role from head to toe in ice dancing. The ability to turn out and rotate the ankle also contributes to effortless choctaws and mohawks while also creating a more finished and aesthetically pleasing line. There are very fortunate dance teams who can match nearly each and every turn-out—their feet are always poised at the perfect angle—and the not-so-lucky ones struggling to eliminate the clubfoot or pigeon-toed syndrome. Nothing exists as beautiful as a pure, unbroken line right down to the toe.

Katherine Healy, ballerina/skater/performer and subject of the book, A Very Young Skater, personifies this. Anyone who has witnessed a Healy performance might wonder if her skates are not actually ballet slippers. There are those men and women who have had perfect feet bestowed upon them. There are those, too, who were given feet that are not quite so perfect.

World dance champion Marina Klimova also has been blessed. Surely, she has been well trained and has trained well. Yet her trademark high arabesques in her free dances, for example, indicate a very flexible lower back. How often have most dancers struggled to achieve a straight back with good extension? Klimova does not head for a nose-dive each time her free leg reaches an impressive extension behind her, however, this is not always the case for many others.

Structure of the lower limbs can be a delicate subject, but different shaped legs create different shapes on the ice and different shapes in the air as free legs—an integral part of ice dancing. A beautifully formed leg, properly used, will help create a more beautiful line.

The basic alignment of the knee to the leg can be an asset or a liability to a dancer's skating. A well-aligned leg can help accommodate a better edge, and therefore, a better lean. The opposite situation, an overly knock-kneed skater on a back outside edge, may have the skating knee pushing too far into the circle, resisting the outer edge, instead of being more directly over the skate.

It is not only a skater's physical structure that affects his performance. There are many intangible qualities that are inherited or just happen to come “naturally” that make a difference. There are the fortunate individuals who possess a perfect, innate sense of timing—never dancing off the beat and never even approaching hairline timing difficulties. Fate or good genes, as the case may be, has instilled them with wonderfully accurate internal metronomes. Their only handicap is that they may never empathize with the rhythm-deaf soul just aching to find that elusive beat!

A truly impeccable sense of timing, one more innate than learned, goes beyond skating on the beat. It entails having the knack and the feel for getting the most out of a beat of music, as well as knowing when

by Peter K. Robertson

Change was very much in evidence at this year's Sun Life Skate Canada International. Outside, the host city of Cornwall, Ontario, supplied some beautiful autumn weather, inside, the enthusiastic audiences witnessed three new events: Men's and Ladies' Artistic Programs, and Fours. What they did not see were compulsory figures, now a thing of the past at Skate Canada.

The Ladies

The Ladies' event was eagerly anticipated since it was to feature the fourth, fifth, and sixth ranked skaters in the world: Patricia Neske, of the Federal Republic of Germany, defending Skate Canada champion Natalia Lebedeva of the Soviet Union, and Kristi Yamaguchi of the U.S. Canadian champion Karen Preston was unfortunately sidelined with an injury; taking her place was Lisa Sargeant, the unexpected 1989 Canadian bronze medalist. The wild card of the event had to be France's Surya Bonaly, who generated much interest and controversy at the '89 Europeans and Worlds.

In the original program, Lebedeva was the first to take the ice, skating to The Phantom of the Opera. Like most of the women, her combination was a triple toe loop/double toe loop and the solo double jump the flip. Her performance was clean, if not memorable, and received marks which would prove good enough for third place.

Neske followed and put herself out of contention by falling on the triple toe loop attempt and therefore missing the combination completely. Her other elements were strong, particularly a fine combination spin. Marks from the judges left her in seventh place.

Skating third was Yamaguchi. Although her program, set to a medley from A Chorus Line, lacked sophistication, she virtually walked away with the event by landing the most difficult combination, a triple Lutz/double toe loop. Everything else was very solid and, with marks of 5.5 to 5.7, she took unanimous first place.

With the favorites having skated, the performances of the remaining seven ladies might have been something of an anticlimax. However, strong programs with successful triple/double jump combinations were turned in by the German Democratic Republic's Simone Lang, Japan's Yukiko Kashiara, Sargeant, and Bonaly, who for good measure did the double jump first, followed by the triple. Lang was a surprise second, with Sargeant fourth, Kashiara fifth, and Bonaly sixth.

In the long program, Bonaly skated first. Incredibly, she attempted seven triples and was successful with five, including the Lutz. Although by no means the most graceful or artistic skater in the world, she is considerably smoother than she was in Paris. Unfortunately, her technical feats were greeted with unenthusiastic marks that actually dropped her to seventh in the final standings.

Neske featured two good triples, a toe loop and a Salchow but two-footed another triple toe loop and fell on a second triple Salchow. In general, she atoned somewhat for her poor showing in the original program. Kashiara skated a pleasingly choreographed program that featured four successful triple jumps. She fell on a triple flip and again on a double Axel. Nor was it a good night for Lebedeva, who two-footed one triple toe loop, touched a hand to the ice on another, and even singled a double Axel before she finished a rather lackluster routine that featured only one good triple, a Salchow.

Even the usually sure-footed Yamaguchi was below her best form. She opened by falling from a triple Lutz; however, she fought back with good triple flip and triple toe loop jumps, before falling again on a triple Salchow. She showed championship form by putting the errors behind her and going on to land three more successful triple jumps. She also displayed considerably more maturity than she had in the original program. Despite her mistakes, the technical difficulty of what she did complete and the poise she displayed made her, once again, the unanimous choice for first place.

Sargeant followed, with a medal now apparently within her grasp. However, it was not to be, as she fell twice. She just managed to hold a triple loop and was also successful with a triple Salchow. Her lively presentation of a well-choreographed program was still apparent, but her relative inexperience did not enable her to shrug off the mistakes and her medal hopes were lost.

Last to take to the ice was Lang, who must have realized that a clean program would be enough to give her the silver medal. Accordingly, she skated conservatively, landing three triples: two Salchows and a toe loop. With no serious error, she entertained the audience with a rousing gypsy number and was solidly in second place. The next five places were very close, however, in the end, it was Lebedeva who narrowly won the bronze medal, with Neske following in fourth place, Kashiara fifth, and Sargeant sixth.

The Pairs

Favored to win the pair event were the 1989 World silver medalists, Cindy Landry and Lyndon Johnston of Canada. But it would not be easy: they had to face not only the strong German Democratic Republic team of Peggy Schwarz and Alexander Koenig, but also a young and exciting Soviet pair, Elena Leonova and Gennady Krasnitsky.

The Soviets were the first to skate the original program. Technically, they excelled with side-by-side double Axels and an excellent double twist. Their presentation was quite good as well, except for their distinctly unattractive costumes. Marks of 5.2 to 5.5 put them in strong contention for one of the top positions.

Landry and Johnston, using the same Gershwin music as last year, had easily the best presentation of the day, highlighted by the flip-out exit from an overhead lift and another fine double twist. The only blemish was a two-footed landing by Landry on the individual double Lutz. For required elements, they received marks of 5.2 to 5.5; for presentation, the range was 5.4 to 5.7, and they moved into the lead.

Schwarz and Koenig skated very strongly, except for the fact that their double Axels were slightly out of synchronization. Good marks put them in third place. The two American pairs followed. Natasha Kuchiki and Todd Sand gave a strong, clean performance. Calla Urbanski and Mark Naylor were less fortunate; they finished seventh, two places lower than their compatriots.

The final pair were the second Canadian entry, Michelle Menzies and Kevin Wheeler. Both very strong skaters, they completed all the elements and skated throughout with such speed that they always seemed as if they were about to lose control, but never did. They finished the original program in fourth place.

Kuchiki and Sand opened the free skating with another strong effort, set to

Natasha Kuchiki & Todd Sand,

Madame Butterfly. They seemed to have a real rapport with the Puccini music and with each other, in an error-free program. Side-by-side double Axels, throw double loop, and an excellent throw triple Salchow were among the highlights. They retained their fifth position easily.

Urbanski and Naylor followed with a jam-packed program that was marred by two bad falls. A triple twist, a very good throw double Axel, and their lively presentation helped them move up to sixth.

The first of the top four to skate were Schwarz and Koenig. To the strains of "Rhapsody in Blue," they opened well with a triple twist and then attempted side-by-side triple toe loops, but Schwarz turned hers into a double. Despite some strong elements, such as a throw double Axel and a pair of very good death spirals, there were problems with a two-footed throw triple Salchow and a fall by Schwarz on an individual double Axel. Marks of 5.0 to 5.6 left their medal hopes vulnerable.

Leonova and Krasnitsky then presented their version of Carmen and despite the familiarity of the music, it was an artistic success. It was also full of excellent content: a very high triple twist, side-by-side triple toe loops and double Axels, throw double Salchow and throw double Axel, and some very original lifts. They were unquestionably the new leaders and, with marks of 5.5 to 5.8, clearly challenged for the gold.

Menzies and Wheeler confirmed the favorable impression they had made in the original program with another technically difficult, flawlessly skated program. Noteworthy were the double twist, side-by-side double Axels, throw triple Salchow, a platter lift with a lateral twist dismount, and a throw triple Salchow with incredible height and speed. They deservedly moved into third place.

Finally, it came down to the last couple to skate, Landry and Johnston. They were certainly capable of beating the Soviets, but they could not afford any mistakes. As it happened, two errors early in the program settled the issue: attempted side-by-side triple Salchows resulted in Landry doubling hers and Johnston over-rotating his, and Landry touched a hand down on the throw double Axel. The rest of the program was virtually flawless and, for a pairs program, was most unusual choreographically. Set to music from the ballets, Sleeping Beauty and Cinderella, it included a lovely flowing waltz section that was almost ice dancing, but still included some fine pair elements such as a superb throw triple Salchow. Such was their artistic maturity that, despite the errors, they received marks of 5.5 to 5.8 and only narrowly lost the gold medal to the Soviet couple.

The Dance

If there was one event which seemed to have no clear favorite, it was ice dancing. Americans Suzanne Semanick and Ron Kravette, Canadians Michelle McDonald and Mark Mitchell, and Soviets Ilona Melnichenko and Gennady Kasikov all seemed to have a chance.

Suzanne Semanick & Ron Kravette,

After the first compulsory dance, the Starlight Waltz, Semanick and Kravette found themselves in a tie for first place with McDonald and Mitchell, despite a stumble by Semanick. The Soviets were close behind in third place. A strong Tango Romantica gave Semanick and Kravette sole possession of first place after the compulsories, with the Canadians second. The Soviets were narrowly pushed back to third place. The second Canadian entry of Jacqueline Petr and Mark Janoschak were fourth.

The original set pattern dance rhythm this year is the Samba, and as with last year's Charleston, it was felt that many of the dances did not properly conform to the correct specifications. Many observers felt that most of the dances were closer to a Rhumba than a Samba. The truest Samba was probably that of McDonald and Mitchell, whose exuberant performance (to a piece of music called "Mambo Jumbo Samba") was undoubtedly the hit of this portion of the event. Nevertheless, the judges placed them a close second to Semanick and Kravette. The latter couple, like the Soviets, gave performances that were energetic and technically difficult, but somehow lacking the genuine feeling. Thus, at the halfway point, Semanick and Kravette were first, McDonald and Mitchell second, Melnichenko and Kaskov third, and Petr and Janoschak fourth. This was how the top four were now expected to finish, but there was at least one surprise in store.

The first of the leaders to skate the free dance were McDonald and Mitchell. It must be admitted that after their sparkling OSP, the free dance, although well skated, wasn't quite at the same level. Set to a series of gypsy dances, they carried the theme throughout the program in terms of steps and positions and even costumes, but somehow it just didn't seem to be as suited to them as the exuberance of the Samba. Good marks of 5.2 to 5.6 kept them very solidly in second place.

The Soviets, who followed, skated a typically difficult Soviet free dance, which somehow left no particular impression, perhaps because of a serious fall. What it did do was open the door for the one upset that occurred.

Immediately after them skated Petr and Janoschak. Right from the start, it was obvious that this was the one couple who were really going to try something different. Set to selections from the soundtrack of the film, The Last Emperor, this was an Oriental program, costumed and choreographed with great attention to the theme and full of interesting and unusual positions. It was a roaring success with the audience who gave it the only standing ovation of the entire dance competition. The judges, impressed with this relatively little known couple, saw fit to move them up to the bronze medals above the Soviets.

Semanick and Kravette followed with a much more conventional free dance that was, nevertheless, a display of technical ability, full of beautiful edges and good unison, and considerably more relaxed than their rather frantic OSP. Marks of 5.4 to 5.7 gave them a well-earned gold medal, with the two Canadian couples taking the silver and the bronze.

The Men

The men's event promised a showdown between Petr Barna of Czechoslovakia and Paul Wylie of the United States. Both technically gifted skaters with considerable artistry, they appeared to have the first two medals sewn up, with the bronze possibly a toss-up between Michael Slipchuk of Canada, Cameron Medhurst of Australia, and Daniel Weiss of the Federal Republic of Germany. As usual, however, not everything went according to the script.

The original program took its toll as several of the men missed the jump combination or the solo jump. The first of the top contenders to skate was Barna. Performing to music from Paganini, he opened with a triple Lutz/triple toe loop. The Lutz was fine, but the toe loop was over-rotated and two-footed. Undeterred, he then went on to skate the rest of his program perfectly featuring the best spins of the day. For required elements, his marks were 5.3 to 5.5; as expected, the presentation marks were higher: 5.7's and 5.8's.

Wylie chose a lively, up-tempo number highlighted by a very solid triple Lutz/double loop combination. A definite crowd pleaser, he received marks of 5.3 to 5.7 for the elements and 5.5 to 5.8 for presentation.

Slipchuk, skating to music by the Stray Cats, fell while trying a triple Axel in his jump combination. However, his improved presentation and the difficulty of his program still kept him in contention for third place. Medhurst landed a clean triple Lutz/double toe loop but then hurt his chances when an attempted triple Salchow was awkwardly turned into a double that he was unable to land properly.

Weiss was an audience favorite, as usual, skating to Michael Jackson and even inserting a little moon-walking in his straight line step sequence. He did not attempt the difficult elements of some of the others, limiting himself to a triple toe loop/double toe loop combination and another triple toe loop, which he over-rotated. Dmitry Gromov, of the USSR, landed two triple Lutzes, one in combination with a double toe loop, but then fell from his double Axel.

At the end of the original program, Barna had the lead over Wylie, in a four-three split of the judges. Weiss followed in third, with Slipchuk fourth.

In the free skating, as Slipchuk attempted a very ambitious program, including six triples. Four of them—the Lutz, toe loop, and two Salchows—were successful, but the Axel and a second toe loop resulted in falls.

The top three skated last. The first was Barna. This time skating to Verdi, he opened strongly with a triple Lutz/double toe loop combination, followed by an attempted quadruple toe loop. He wasn't quite able to complete the rotation, but it appears to be only a matter of time before he lands this jump in competition. He went on to land four more different triples, in an artistically skated, well-choreographed routine. Marks of 5.6 to 5.9 left little room, but an upset was mathematically possible.

Wylie, however, was unable to rise to the occasion. A touch-down on a triple flip and a fall on a triple Axel in the first thirty seconds of the program determined his fate. He did manage to rally for a good triple Lutz and triple toe loop, but fell out of another toe loop attempt. His beautifully laid-out program, which he retained from last year, stood him in good stead artistically, however, and he held in second place.

Petr Barna, CZE

Paul Wylie, USA

Weiss closed out the event, and once again gave a performance that was a little weak technically but very entertaining, thanks to his musicality and showmanship. Skating to "Sing, Sing, Sing," he landed two good triples, a toe loop and a Salchow, just barely saved a triple loop and over-rotated another triple toe.

The event concluded with the top five places unchanged from the results of the original program. Barna was a most deserving champion, with the first place votes of all seven judges. Wylie received the silver medal and Weiss the bronze.

The Artistic Programs

Two of the most anticipated events this year were the new "Artistic Programs" for men and ladies which made for two events of considerable variety that the judges found difficult to mark. On the surface, it seemed straight forward enough: one 2-minute, 30-second program in which the emphasis was on the skater's ability to interpret music, rather than on technical abilities. No double Axels or triple jumps were permitted. In other areas, there was total latitude: no restrictions of any kind on either costumes or music. Some skaters took advantage of this, with vocal music and show costumes they could never use in regular competition. Others stayed with traditional outfits and instrumental music.

Norm Proft of Canada had obviously put a great deal of thought into his program and decided to take full advantage of the freedom given. Skating very dramatically to music from the film, Cry Freedom, his program was exactly that: a cry for freedom for victims of political oppression. Although the number was powerfully and movingly skated, what was most apparent was his obvious sincerity and belief in what he was saying. More than any other skater, he illustrated the quandary that faced the judges: among a field of five skaters, he received one vote for every place from first to fifth!

Paul Wylie was probably the pre-competition favorite. He was attempting to convey an equally serious theme: the night before the crucifixion. As with Proft, the most striking thing about Wylie was the conviction with which he performed to "Gethsemane" from Jesus Christ Superstar. Although sensitively skated, the theme never really came across. Instead, it was best enjoyed as an exquisite display of deep edges and beautiful line.

Last to skate was the Federal Republic of Germany's Daniel Weiss. He was out to entertain, pure and simple, as he portrayed the morning after a big night to

Jenni Meno, USA

"One Rock and Roll Too Many" from Starlight Express. He was a little erratic technically, nearly falling on a flying sit spin, but it didn't matter as he brought the audience to its feet with a cleverly choreographed and skated routine.

The final results showed Weiss an extremely popular winner, with Wylie and Proft receiving well merited silver and bronze medals, respectively.

The ladies' event, held a night later, brought generally less exciting performances but somewhat more consistency in the judging.

Diane Takeuchi of Canada, brought a higher level of drama to the ice. She chose to interpret selections from Evita. Skating with considerable presence and the fast, well-centered spins that are her forte, she took the lead.

This standard was maintained by the following skater, Yukiko Kashiara of Japan. Her theme was "The Spring of Awakening." With lovely positions and graceful spins, she wove a gently hypnotic spell, moving across the ice as softly and delicately as the cherry blossoms she was portraying. Marks ranging from a low of 4.9 to a high of 5.7 enabled her to move into first place.

The final competitor was Jenni Meno of the U.S. who performed to Sheena Easton's rendition of "Hero" from the movie, Beaches. Dedicated to her father, the number was somewhat conventional in choreography and costume, but it was beautifully and confidently skated and well received by both the audience and the judges.

One very significant fact emerged in the awarding of the ladies' medals, as the gold went to Kashiara, the silver to Takeuchi, and the bronze to Meno. All of these skaters have yet to make the world teams of their respective nations, but their artistry made them worthy winners in this event. Clearly, reputation and previous success did not guarantee top results.

The big issue is whether there is any future for artistic events in international competitions. They lend themselves to even more subjectivity in judging than do the regular single events, but going by the reactions of the Cornwall audience, they could be real crowd pleasers.

The Fours

The third of the three new events at Skate Canada was the fours competition. Of course, there's really nothing new about fours; it was formerly included in the Canadian and U.S. Championships and the biennial North American Championships. Nevertheless, this year's Skate Canada marked the first time the event has ever been contested as part of an open international competition.

Unlike the artistic events, there are several rules in fours regarding technical requirements. Many are similar to those for pairs, but it should be emphasized that a four does not simply consist of two pairs skating side by side throughout the four-minute program. Instead, it consists of four individual skaters who must coordinate all of their movements to create a single impression. Basically, these moves fall into three types. First, there are individual moves, such as solo jumps, spins, and footwork, which all four must perform in unison. Second, there are the standard pair moves, such as throw jumps, lifts, combination spins, and death spirals, which are performed side by side; the couples should not perform all of these elements with their partner, but should exchange partners. Finally, there are what might be termed "fours" moves which involve all four skaters at once. These include four-person combination spins, death spirals, and lifts. It is in these moves that the skaters really get to exercise their creativity and originality.

The first four to skate really set the standard: Canadians Christine Hough, Cindy Landry, Lyndon Johnston, and Doug Ladret, all of whom have considerable experience skating fours. Theirs was a very mature and artistic program, full of technical content. Side-by-side throw triple Salchows and throw double Axels, individual double flips and double toe loops performed in unison, a very intricate fours combination spin, side-by-side forward inside death spirals (after an exchange of partners) and a backward outside fours death spiral were among the highlights. Despite skating first, their marks ranged from 5.5 to 5.7 pointing to the gold.

The American four who followed, Elaine Asanakis, Calla Urbanski, Joel McKeever, and Mark Naylor, deserve much credit for gamely entering an event unfamiliar to them. Inevitably, their inexperience showed in the occasional loss of unison and minor difficulties, but overall they performed very creditably.

Another Canadian team, Patricia MacNeil, Michelle Menzies, Cory Watson, and Kevin Wheeler was a very pleasant surprise, as they skated very powerfully. One fours lift, in which Wheeler lifted Menzies, tossed her over his head to Watson, and then lifted MacNeil, brought an audible gasp from the entire audience. Nevertheless, their silver medal performance was very encouraging.

As with the artistic events, the future of fours in international competition remains to be seen. However, two things should be pointed out. The first is that the judges, with technical criteria to guide them, were much more consistent: all three places were decided unanimously. The second is that the event may well have been the most popular of the entire competition.

For all of its changes and experimentation, this sixteenth Skate Canada was a considerable success. It was particularly fascinating to anyone interested in the modification that the sport is currently undertaking. Next year, the event will be held in Lethbridge, Alberta. Who knows what further developments are in store?

Mr. Robert A. Mock, Editor
American Skating World

Dear Bob:

In the editorial entitled "Getting Skating's Fair Share" which appeared in the July 1989 issue of American Skating World, there was a laudable call for more funds for U.S. skaters. There is no doubt that our skaters can justifiably use more funding.

At the same time, the reference in your editorial to the recent USA Today article which showed the USFSA receiving only $15,000 from the USOC can be misleading. First, the $15,000 represented the distribution of training grants through May 1989; there is considerably more to come. Second, the $15,000 came from the USOC Operation Gold Program. To qualify for these funds, a skater must place 6th or higher in the most recent World Championships. The 1989 recipients were Christopher Bowman, Joseph Duar, Rudy Galindo, Jill Trenary, Susan Wynne, and Kristi Yamaguchi.

Your editorial raised some pertinent questions, so at the risk of overlooking some pocket of funding, I thought it might be useful to summarize the sources of monies for elite skaters (World Team, National Team, and National competitors):

1. U.S. Olympic Committee:

Level I Basic Grants — $45,000 (30 skaters eligible — top 5 in National Senior events, or lower, if skaters retire)

Operation Gold — $15,000 (6 skaters eligible — 6th place or better at Worlds)

Level II Special Assistance Grants — up to $150,000 (30 skaters eligible for up to $5,000 each; USOC special need requirements must be met)

In order to qualify for Level II Special Assistance Grants, a skater must have been the recipient of a Level I Basic Grant. We have therefore tried to make as many of our athletes as possible eligible for Level I, thereby opening up additional funding potential. Originally, 18 skaters were eligible for Level I; in July 1989, we were able to persuade the USOC to increase the number of eligible athletes to 30.

In addition, the Olympic Committee has funds for tuition assistance for those athletes who qualify and an Olympic Job Opportunities Program. Through the USOC's centralized funding program, the USFSA will also receive $60,000 in 1989 for elite singles, pairs, and dance training camps.

2. USFSA Memorial Fund. The USFSA Memorial Fund expended approximately $383,200 through June 30, 1989 for grants, scholarships, and special awards to skaters. The budget for the 1989/1990 year is $395,400. Under its two mainstay programs, the Memorial Fund is expected to make the following grants during the upcoming competitive/academic year:

Level of Skater	CSEP/ Competitor Grant (Average)	ASP/ Academic Grant (Average)
Novice
Singles	$ 765
Pairs	575
Dance	575
Junior
Singles	$ 925	$650
Pairs	1,050	650
Dance	915	650
Senior
Singles	$1,500	$650
Pairs	1,410	650
Dance	1,360	650
World Team Members
Singles	$7,500	$650
Pairs	6,000	650
Dance	6,000	650

3. USFSA General Fund. In 1988/1989, the World Tour generated $250,000 for skaters' training. An additional $250,000 from the Tour has been set aside for 1989/1990, with distribution estimated as follows:

Level of Skater	World Tour Grant
Novice
Singles	$ 270 (1)
Pairs	270 (1)
Dance	270 (1)

Singles	$1,875 (2)
Pairs	1,875 (2)
Dance	1,875 (2)

Singles	$1,089 (3)
Pairs	1,089 (3)
Dance	1,089 (3)

Singles	$4,200
Pairs	4,200
Dance	4,200

- (1) Given to all National competitors not otherwise indicated.
- (2) Given to members of the World Junior Team.
- (3) Given to members of the U.S. National Team.

4. Summary. Looking at direct training support on an individual basis, a World Team member who placed in the top six in singles at the 1989 Worlds can expect to receive from the USOC and the USFSA approximately $16,500, before any special assistance or private funding.

Another way of looking at athlete support is to total just the USOC and USFSA monies already committed for 1989/1990, before any special assistance grants, extraordinary distributions, international team expenses, and the like. This amounts to $705,400.

There are several other sources of support. For example, there is the USFSA Vice Presidents' Excellence Fund, which is used to reward or assist skaters in each section. The amount budgeted for this Fund in the current fiscal year is $45,000, or $15,000 per section.

Many skaters are the beneficiaries of restricted funds within the USFSA Memorial Fund, and a growing number now have trust funds, into which monies may be deposited for participation in exhibitions and promotional activities.

There are numerous other USFSA and USOC expenditures which benefit skaters, but which go unnoticed. The expenses of coaches and skaters attending international competitions are paid for by the USFSA. In 1988/1989, the airfare alone mounted to $115,000.

Sports medicine activities, which have led to increased awareness about doping control, nutrition, and proper training techniques, have been underwritten in large measure by the USOC. And, indeed, the expenses of running competitions which, after all, are for the skaters, are borne by the USFSA and its Member Clubs.

More funds are always needed. We'd like to provide financial encouragement to a greater number of aspiring athletes, and to support disciplines in which we are weaker competitively. Charitable contributions to the USFSA Memorial Fund are always cheerfully and gratefully accepted.

Sincerely,

Paul E. George

Olympic Representative

RINK OPERATIONS LIAISON COMMITTEE

by Richard Hooper, Chairman

In May 1988, the Rink Operations Liaison Committee was established by the USFSA. "The purpose of the Committee is to identify problems and concerns in communications, planning, program, administration, and in general practice of the relationships between USFSA member clubs and rink management and operations, and make recommendations for improvements in order to create a spirit of goodwill and cooperation that mutually furthers the sport of figure skating."

The common goal of this Committee is to assist rink managers and operators in all areas of the ice skating industry, and to open the lines of communications between the USFSA and rink management members. In order to carry out this goal the USFSA established the rink membership category, Committee Organization Group.

In becoming a rink management member you receive the following benefits:

- Privilege of belonging to the national governing body of figure skating
- USFSA membership certificate
- Complimentary USFSA Rulebook
- Recognition (listing) in the USFSA Rulebook
- Announcement to attend the annual USFSA Governing Council Meeting

- One year subscription to Skating magazine
- Receive important USFSA communications
- A periodic "rink management column" in Skating magazine
- Receive Basic Skills Manual

The Rink Operations Liaison Committee is comprised of members who are knowledgeable in all areas of the ice skating business. As a member you are offered the opportunity to communicate with other professionals who are knowledgeable in many areas . . . marketing and promotions, management, starting a learn-to-skate program, member club relationships, problem solving, hosting competitions and test sessions, and how sanctions apply to your operations, etc.

The rink management section is also an area where rink managers and operators can express their ideas and concerns. We are all aware of changes that have been made and will be made in the future as the sport of ice skating continues to grow. It is very important that managers and operators are a part of these decisions, because the people and organizations who leave our facilities rely on us being in business.

The Rink Operations Liaison Committee would like to hear from rink managers and operators regarding any aspect of the committee by writing to USFSA, 20 First Street, Colorado Springs, CO 80906 or by calling (719) 635-5200.

Ice Dancing

to let go and proceed to the next movement. A dancer displaying this quality surely possesses a very special sensitivity to music and its accompanying motion.

To further illustrate the makings of a fine-tuned skater, consider the similarities between ice dancing and parallel parking; they both require a keen intuition and excellent judgment. Individuals performing these tasks must know how deep to skate an edge; how much to turn the wheel, how tight to track, how close to park to the curb, when to prepare for transitions, and when to straighten out the tires. We have all encountered good and bad drivers; some have better instincts than others. The same holds true for skaters, for good judgement is a super tool for superb skating.

Perhaps one day a brilliant scientist will isolate which gene combinations contribute to our intuitive senses and the physical attributes that affect skating. In the meantime, however, hard work, good coaching, and good judgment can help overcome many deficiencies, large or small.

Ice skating is not always an entirely comfortable or natural sport. With so much resistance and opposition to physical forces (e.g. rotation, speed, gravity), how could it be? The challenge of striving for perfection would be missing if we were all given tremendous amounts of natural ability. After all, a seven-way tie for first place by seven Marina Klimovas just would not be practical!
